Black history society is incorporated

The Society for the Study of Afro-American History in Winston-Salem and Forsyth County has been incorporated by the State of North Carolina.

The organization started in 1981 as an ad hoc committee interested in providing a yearly community project or program designed to create dialogue between the different ethnic groups.

In February 1981, the committee produced its first program at St. Paul's United Methodist Church. The program was called "Building a Community of Oneness."

Since then, the group has sponsored a cultural and educational program yearly in keeping with its original goal.

Within the past year, the group has begun to develop a black history organization that is attempting to develop a black history society, to locate, record and develop the history of blacks in Winston-Salem/Forsyth County and to develop a black historical museum to house artifacts related to the black experience.

The officers of the group are William Rice, president; Donald Schoonmaker, vice president; Harold Brown, second vice president; Pam Kahl, treasurer; Herman Aldridge, secretary, and William E. "Bill" East, journalist.

The group's consultants are Joseph Bradshaw, Louise Hamilton, Dorothy Blount, Harold Kennedy and Lenwood Davis.
