Custodians

Black custodians have not spoken out publicly before for fear of losing their jobs, he said. The man said that he had spoken to Beaufort O. Bailey, the only black school board member, about his concerns.

Bailey said he, in turn, has spoken to Superintendent Zane E. Eargle about the problem.

In order to get blacks into supervisory positions, Bailey said, either a position will have to be created or someone will have to retire.

"Once a vacancy is created, I think the superintendent will try to make amends," he said.

Bailey said that he would support creating another supervisory position only if it is needed.

Bailey said that he feels that at least one of the supervisors should be black.

"I think it's a shame we don't have any blacks in those positions," he said.

Clodfelter said that, to his knowledge, neither of the present supervisors plans to retire soon. He said that the custodial supervisor has been with the system since 1968 and the assistant custodial supervisor since 1972.

Another black head custodian in the system who did not want to be named said he is dissatisfied not only with the custodians' situation, but also with the lack of black carpenters and electricians in the school system.

Clodfelter said that there are 32 plumbing, heating and electrical personnel. They all are white.

Of the 15 painters, Clodfelter said, two are black. Three of the 26 people who take care of school grounds are black, he said.

five years he will retire and work in a business of his own. "But I would like to pave the way for the people coming up behind me."

Another black head custodian who has been with the school system for seven years said that he is also concerned about the lack of blacks in supervisory roles. He said that he feels stagnant in his position.

"We as black people are not being promoted," he said.

The man said that he will probably not remain with the school

Epperson

Epperson said he decided to have a news conference in the housing project because many residents have complained about drug use in their neighborhood. Four police officers accompanied him at the news conference.

"The drug problem is particularly great here," Epperson said. "The folks here have been asking for help."

Epperson is challenging incumbent Democrat Steve Neal for his 5th District U.S. House seat. Epperson denied being politically motivated to hold the news conference in a black neighborhood, although he said he is seeking black votes in November.

Approximately 40 residents attended Epperson's news conference. Some thanked him for being concerned about the drug problem in their neighborhoods.

"Young people here need to learn that these drugs will eventually kill them," said one elderly woman who asked not to be named. "We must educate our children about the dangers of drug abuse."

Others said they resented the fact that he singled out their neighborhood and said they doubted that the task force will accomplish anything.

"I'm leaving as soon as I can find something else that will pay me what I'm making or more than I make now," he said.

The man said that he is planning to take his concerns to the local NAACP.

Clodfelter said that 1985-86 salaries for head custodians in the school system ranged from $1,042.19 a month to $1,539.30 a month.

In the past, a training course was required. All three of the black workers interviewed said that they have attended the training course at Forsyth Technical College.

Clodfelter said that now a person must be recommended by a school principal and approved by the custodial supervisor to get the job.

Clodfelter said that the pool of black applicants is small. In hiring electricians, the system looks for people with three or four years of experience, he said.

Blacks who may qualify are usually taken by big industries who can pay them more, Clodfelter said.

"It's bad," said one of the black head custodians, referring to the numbers. "There should be some changes made."

Said a young black man: "The police know what is going on in this neighborhood, but they are not ' doing anything about it."

Added a woman: "He (Epperson) can't stop drugs from coming in here. Those white boys are the ones who bring these drugs into our neighborhood. Too many people are making too much money off of drugs."

Epperson said 75 residents signed a petition urging that something be done about the drug problem. "Anyone who is serious about the problem will support our program," he said.

The task force will make recommendations on Oct. 1 on ways to curb drug traffic, Epperson said. "We want to make people aware of the dangers of using drugs," he said.

The death of University of Maryland basketball player Len Bias shows the tragedy of drug abuse, Epperson said. Bias died of a heart attack in June that was induced by a cocaine overdose.

federal government could provide a tax incentive for these businesses," he said.

In addition, residents in housing projects should be given the opportunity to own their homes, Epperson said. "The resident-management program is a good idea," he said.

Epperson said he will visit more black neighborhoods during his campaign.

"Neal has taken the black vote for granted," Epperson said. "They (blacks) have kept his office (for him) for 12 years."

In an telephone interview from his Washington office last week, Neal said he is not taking the black vote for granted.

"I have always had strong support from the black community," Neal said. "I am looking out for the interests of all people."

Neal criticized Epperson for playing politics with the black vote. "He is only talking, and talk is cheap," Neal said. "He hasn't done anything for people for the last 12 years; now he has all these ideas."

This year the Special Populations Unit of the Winston-Salem Recreation Department is offering a Purchase Award for the entry best representing "My Favorite Time of Year." The winning work will be featured on a card used by the unit.

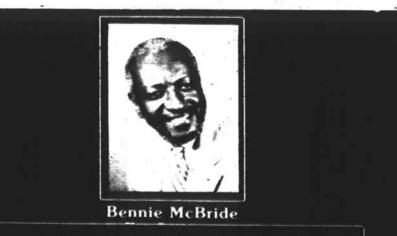

The exhibition is sponsored by the Winston-Salem Recreation. Department, the Winston-Salem Crafts Guild and the Arts Council.
