

Bennett to sponsor 'Famine Complex and Women'

Bennett College, a historically female liberal arts institution in Greensboro, will sponsor a series of lectures, films and workshops on "The Famine Complex and Women: Culture, History and Science" Oct. 8 through 11.

security have been invited to speak on the topic.

The extent and significance of the roles women have in securing food for their families and for their communities will be highlighted.

Other topics, such as the recent hunger-threatening drought and farmland losses in the United States, will also be addressed.

Representation from approximately 20 countries is expected.

The Bennett Scholars Program, sponsor of the event, is the college's honors program. An integral component of the program, which currently has 46 members, is the providing of service to a broader community through conferences open to the public on sensitive and timely issues which relate specifically to women.

The conference, intended to be a major contribution to the public's understanding of the breadth and depth of the food security/food scarcity issues, has been funded by the Z. Smith Reynolds Foundation of Winston-Salem and by the Women's Division of the General Board of Global Ministries of the United Methodist Church.

Dodd and Dalton families gather for annual reunion events

The Dodd and Dalton families recently continued the tradition of family reunions which they began in 1957.

The first reunion was organized by Roy Dodd and other family members. It has been held in the various areas in North Carolina. It was held in Winston-Salem the first weekend in August this year.

Activities were also conducted at Rock Masonic Temple in Wernersville.

Members of the Dodd family are responsible for preparing this year's meals. Family members included Glennie Dodd, Jean Hickmon, Tony Searcy, April Smith, Sandra Moore, Paige Searcy and Brahnall Wesley.

The family met Sunday at the Masonic Temple and discussed plans for the 1987 reunion.

Young members of the family presented a talent display, and following the event family members met for a buffet meal prepared by Thelma Dodd, Maggie Dodd, Glennie Dodd, Gubie Jean Hickmon and Sandra Moore.

Out-of-town guests were Porter Dodd and family of Columbia, S.C., and Frances Dodd Holliday of California.

Mrs. Lassiter says some of the program's participants have been invited to colleges and gone on to become community leaders.

Another of the projects undertaken by one of the national chapters is the Court Tours program, which provides students an opportunity to become familiar with the workings of the court system.

The national organization annually sponsors an "African Heritage Well" project, which provides funds to drought-stricken African countries to assist them in digging wells. The NBW also participates in efforts to raise funds for the United Negro College Fund.

Looking ahead, Mrs. Lassiter says that the organization as a whole plans to begin a program to educate young people about Martin Luther King Jr.

It has been called to our attention that young people in school don't know a lot about Martin Luther King," Mrs. Lassiter says. "That's something we need to work on. If we're going to have a Martin Luther King Day, we need to have our young people know who he is. The NBW will be joining forces with other organizations to deal with this issue. We're going to begin involving all of the schools that are named after Martin Luther King. We have to keep him in the minds of people across the country who Martin Luther King was and what his contribution to civil rights was."

The national association places emphasis on education and of the Dorothy Atkinson Legal Education Scholarship to natural scholars. The 16-member Winston-

Salem Barristers' Wives chapter is also active in providing educational programs and opportunities for students.

The local chapter provides scholarship opportunities in the form of the Jasper Alston Atkins Scholarship. The award is presented in honor of Atkins, the son of Winston-Salem State University founder Simon Green Atkins, who was a pioneer lawyer in Winston-Salem.

Mrs. Lassiter says the scholarship is traditionally presented to WSSU graduates to assist them in attending the law school of their choice.

During the Denver convention members discussed topics such as "The Black Family: There Is a Great Future in Our Past," which traced the history of black families for nearly three million years, and "Black Professionals in the Media."

Mrs. Lassiter says each of the seminars and discussions provided useful insight on current topics. She also says the organization has pledged to pursue some of the suggestions offered by the seminar leaders.

Mrs. Lassiter also praised the efficiency of the Denver host chapter; she says that this convention was one of the best she has attended.

"The 1986 convention in Denver was an excellent convention," she says. "Each year it gets better, but we were all particularly happy with this convention."

"The host chapter is a young chapter, and they're not a large chapter, but they did a marvelous job. It's amazing that a chapter so small and so young could do such a wonderful job."
