wants to put on a tournament." Dunavant said purse-cutting is not an unusual practice in North American Golf Association events and that purses are rarely guaranteed because of liability. "The purse at Cleveland was cut 50 percent and at Knoxville 10 percent," Dunavant said. "The GGO (Greater Greensboro Open) lost $500,000 the year before last and Forest Oaks didn't get a bad reputation. But most of the time the purse is paid. "If I threw a rock show at Ernie Shore Field and didn't pay the musicians, then that would be my reputation, not the city's."

Gavin said that most tournaments at city courses are amateur events and don't involve purses. He also said that the Recreation Department weighed the pros and cons of a pro tournament against weekend golfing. He said that Winston Lake didn't want to keep its established clientele off the course.

Dunavant, a free-lance golf teacher, applied for the Winston Lake pro post when it was open last year. When Morris got the job, Dunavant claimed he was discriminated against because of his active role in the local civil rights efforts of the 1960s.

"I have nothing against Ernest Morris," he said. "My point is that Winston Lake is a public course. How do they determine who can and cannot put on tournaments?"

Dunavant said he is considering legal action. Although Evna L. Penn, a member of the Recreation Commission, attempted to defer the issue to another time, the commission took no action on Dunavant's accusation. Penn also asked Dunavant what action he was seeking. The golf pro said he was not pursuing Winston Lake as a site for his tournament next year. Rather, he would stay at Bel-Aire. He said, however, his objective was to enlighten board members on the manner that the Recreation Department conducts business.

Recreation Director Nick Jamison, accused by Dunavant of being a racist, had no comment.

Ladson Wins Title

Marvin Ladson scored a surprising third-round knockout of Billy "the Kid" Wyatt last Thursday to claim the Southeastern welterweight boxing championship in Richmond, Va.

Ladson's victory in the scheduled 12-rounder made him the first Winston-Salem boxer to capture a professional title. The 27-year-old Ladson has devoted nearly two-thirds of his life to the sport; that has included almost 100 bouts.

While Ladson admitted he was surprised with the outcome, he knew he could stay with Wyatt based on a draw they two fought in May.

"It did surprise me that I stopped him in the third round," Ladson said. "I started out with the right pace, just taking my time."

Ladson, now 28-5 as a pro, kept the pressure up through the first two rounds and was fighting steadily in the third when he scored with a match-ending uppercut.

Thomas "Big Tom" Lawrence, Ladson's manager, was promised an opportunity to fight WBC and IBF welterweight champion Donald Curry, if Ladson can win his next three bouts. Lawrence is scheduling three bouts for Ladson over the next two months, starting with a title match against James Petway, the top-ranked contender in the Southeast.

at Central State. His natural father, Theophilus Paul, and his mother, Yvonne Ali, and stepfather plan to attend the game. It will be the first time any of them have seen the son play college football.

In the long haul, whether he makes it in the NFL or not, Paul plans to be an artist. If he doesn't get an opportunity with a pro team next year, he'll transfer to Forsyth Tech and complete work on a degree in commercial art.

"Then again I might go to Utah, Yellowstone Park or somewhere," he says. Anywhere but the Motor City.
