City residents attend U.S. 88 workshop

Guilford Technical Community College recently hosted 75 Triad residents at one of nine citizens' assemblies conducted across the state by U.S. 88 -- A New Road to the White House.

U.S. 88 is a project sponsored jointly by the Roosevelt Institute for American Policy Studies and the North Carolina Leadership Forum to involve more citizens with politics and public policy.

The workshops included two mini-courses on public policy issues and were followed by discussions of questions which will be posed to presidential candidates during a meeting scheduled for March in Greensboro.

Four federal issues were discussed including the spread of nuclear weapons, long term health care, Central America and the budget deficit.

More than 750,000 applications were sent out across the state by 25 co-sponsoring organizations in order to involve a wide cross section of state residents.

Vernon Robinson, a Winston-Salem State University professor, was among the Winston-Salem residents attending the workshop.

"It was a great experience," Robinson said of a role-playing session he participated in during one of the sessions. "Though we were all from similar cultural backgrounds, spoke the same language and were in the same room, we had trouble communicating and understanding each other well enough to reach agreement. It's not hard to see why people who have different cultures and languages, are separated by considerable distances and who have gripes and distrust that span several centuries have a hard time in reaching international agreements."

Other Afro-Americans from Winston-Salem who participated in the workshop were Walter Marshall and Theldora Small.

One of the special guests was Terrence Blount, the son of one of the local chapter's founders. Blount is grand keeper of records and exchequer at his chapter in Washington, where he is employed as a financial analyst.
