A Message In This 'Mess Age'

Young Apostolic bishop starts new movement, strives to build church for God

By PATRICIA SMITH-DEERING
Chronicle Staff Writer

At a very early age, Kenneth Rogers knew that God had touched his life and that he would have a special calling. He describes himself as being a "babe in arms," yet, he possessed the inspiration of God.

Bishop Rogers, at the age of 17, has joined with Bishop L.J. Goodwin, who is the general overseer of the United Church of God in Jesus Christ Apostolic at 826 Effird Street. What he hopes to do is build a ministry that will one day allow him to branch out with his own church.

Bishop Rogers received his calling when he was nine years old. "It was the inspiration of God and my spiritual mother, Eva Nance Singletary," he said, "that inspired me. She was a member of St. Paul's Apostolic Church." However, he felt that he needed to wait until he was old enough to understand his calling and what that meant before beginning to preach.

He preached his first sermon

at the United Church of Jesus Apostolic where Bishop O.D. LeGrant was the state overseer. He was all of 14 years old.

A year later, he was ordained as the North Carolina Jurisdictional Overseer of the True Vine Pentecostal Churches of Jesus Apostolic where Dr. Robert L. Hairston is the presiding prelate.

Bishop Rogers said he sometimes takes a lot of teasing from his schoolmates at Carver High School, where he is in his senior year. "They call me 'Little Rev.' There are some that don't believe that you can be a minister at an early age," he said.

But he views his youth and his calling as positive proof that age is not a barrier to being and doing whatever a person wants in life. "If you look at me, you can be what you want to be at a young age," he said.

His sermons focus especially on the young people in his church, counseling against drugs, on moral behavior, and on everyday problems such as dating. "There is a message in this 'Mess Age,'" he said.

"I try to preach to them, telling that drugs are not the answer. You can be successful if you put God first in your life. And when they date, I tell them to try to get someone in the church, someone who is living right," he said. He separates his Apostolic faith from that of other Apostolic churches. "We believe in the oneness of God, not the Father, Son, and Holy Ghost," he explained.

As Bishop Goodwin's associate, Bishop Rogers makes visits to other churches in both the Apostolic faith and those in the Trinitarian faith who are contemplating a move into the Apostolic faith.

His long-range goal is to have a church which will be affiliated with the church where he is currently ministering. "It will be named Deliverance Temple of Prayer Apostolic Church," he said.

collectively the alumni could be a catalyst for change in the community, they felt that the first step was to create an opportunity to bring those classes together. The idea for "Camel Fest" was born.

The Class of '66 formed a non-profit organization, chartered under the auspices of the State of North Carolina and officially known as "The Atkins Alumni 1966 Inc." The affair that they planned was billed as "the first ever all-class celebration" and was held Saturday at the M. C. Benton Convention Center.

Approximately 1,000 people, representing the Classes of 1932-1971 danced to music from the years when they were at Atkins, rooting for the Camels and treading lightly in the halls of principals Togo D. West Sr. and Mr. John Carter.

The event was dedicated to Mr. Ernest Frye Wilson, former assistant principal under Principal West, and in memory of Mrs. Ja Vone Adams-Rice, a charter member of The Atkins Alumni 1966 Inc. Mrs. Avonia Hill, secretary at Atkins for more than 30 years, was honored for her long service at the school.

Rutherford Moorman Jr., president of the Class of 1966, hopes that the all-class reunion will result in an organized group, a caucus, that can be prepared to lobby for or against proposed courses of action that would impact the African-American community and its interests. Based on the success of last weekend's one-evening event, it may be the prelude to a larger, weekend Camel Fest next year.

The Anderson Bulldogs All Class Reunion

For the second year, members of Anderson High School classes of 1961-70 returned for a gathering of alumni, a concept that originated with a committed group from the Anderson Senior High Class of 1967. "It's our goal to keep Anderson alumni Bulldogs united," said Mrs. Vivian Bitting, class president.

The Class of 1967 had held reunions to mark their 10th, 15th, and 20th years and were the only class that had, according to Mrs. Bitting. "But, we wanted to take the focus off of us and put it on the others...to get everyone unified," she said.

At the Saturday night dance, the officers of the Class of '67 presented a plaque, designated the B. Reynolds Award, that they purchased that will be given each year to the class that has the most alumni in attendance.

Coincidentally, the class will win it this year. "We were running neck and neck with the Class of 1969," Mrs. Bitting said. "It will be on display at the new Lawrence Joel American Legion Post," she added. She said the other officers felt that more people would have an opportunity to see it if it were placed at the Post, she explained.

Approximately 300 people joined the festivities at the annual dance, Mrs. Bitting estimated. Proceeds are used to fund the next year's annual dance. She added that the Class of 1967 will celebrate its 25th annual reunion in 1992.
