

Girls of the Month

The Salvation Army Girls' Club has honored eight of its members with its prestigious "Girl of the Month" Award. Each month, girls are chosen from the city's three Girls' Club units — Main Unit on Martin Luther King Jr. Drive, Happy Hill Gardens Unit, and Cleveland Avenue Unit — based on their leadership skills, behavior and attitude, completion of homework and study assignments, report card grades, attendance in tutoring and study class programs, participation in career exploration and prevention programming, and their club citizenship.

They are now eligible for "Girl of the Year," which is awarded annually at the Girls' Club Awards Banquet.

Upward Bound gets grant

WSSU's Upward Bound Program, a college preparatory program for students who have the potential to succeed in a post-secondary institution, has been awarded a $10,000 grant by the Sara Lee Corporation to expand in 1991-92.

The award follows on the heels of three other grants. The W-S/FC

Why have over 20,000 people traveled to Southeastern Eye Center for cataract surgery?

Because there is no substitute for experience for "No-Stitch" cataract surgery.

"When my eye doctor in Chatham told me I had cataracts, he recommended Southeastern Eye Center. Now after surgery I can see to read again. The service there was excellent - it couldn't be any better."

A&T in quest to offer doctorates

A&T State University has received two important endorsements in its quest to become the first historically black university in North Carolina to offer the Ph.D. degree in engineering.

The latest endorsement came from C. D. Spangler Jr., president of the University of North Carolina system. Spangler backed the recommendation of a distinguished consulting team of former and current college presidents who made the original recommendation for A&T to be allowed to offer doctoral degrees in electrical and mechanical engineering.

In his recommendation, Spangler said, "North Carolina A&T State University can be the premier black engineering school in the nation. It is a place where it can be dominant . . . We ought to work with them."

"President Spangler's endorsement is extremely important in our quest for a historic mission change," said Dr. Edward B. Fort, A&T Chancellor. "If the Board of Governors' planning committee accepts Mr. Spangler's recommendation we shall move as rapidly as possible to have final plans ready to begin these doctoral programs as early as 1993."

Fort added, "I'm very heartened by the president's decision, and I'm not at all surprised. It's a great day for the university."

The offering of doctoral degrees at A&T was a major long range goal initiated by Fort and his administration. The University has increasingly become a national leader in the field of high-tech education and research. A&T currently leads the nation in the graduation of black engineers at the undergraduate level and also at the master's degree level.

The University offers undergraduate majors in electrical, mechanical, industrial, chemical, civil, and architectural engineering. Graduate degrees are awarded in architectural, electrical, industrial, and mechanical engineering. The University offers the Master of Science in Engineering degree.

A&T was recently designated by the Historically Black Research University Foundation for Science and Technology.

Also the nation's space agency has recently awarded North Carolina A&T State University a grant of $8 million to establish a center of excellence for aerospace research.

The award by the National Aeronautics and Space Administration (NASA) is the largest single research grant ever received by the University. A&T is also operating a NASA-funded $8.4 million joint Mars Mission Research Center with North Carolina State University, with a goal of sending a manned-space vehicle to MARS and back.
