afterloss

Questions & Answers on recovering from grief*

Questions asked during bereavement counseling are answered by the editor of Afterloss, the grief-recovery letter.

Q. I am several months past my loss now. Most days I do very well. Then all of a sudden I become overwhelmed. It causes me to feel sad and depressed all over again. Is this normal?
A. Certainly. Grief can be analogous to waves hitting on the shore. As we work through our grief, the waves begin to subside. It often happens that near special days such as birthdays, anniversaries or holidays another wave will come. If we know this is normal and part of our grief process, we can recover from the waves sooner.
