Dock Anderson Grier Jr. memorial to be established

The members and friends of Reynolds Temple C.M.E. Church are establishing a memorial fund in memory of the late Dock Anderson Grier Jr., the husband of Verna Mills Grier, of Winston-Salem.

Grier was a lifelong member of Reynolds Temple C.M.E. Church, where he served in several official capacities, namely the Trustee Board, the Sr. Choir, and the Steward Board.

Grier was employed by the James G. Hanes Family. In 1984, the Hanes Home (now known as SECCA) honored Grier by dedicating the library in his honor. A plaque hangs on the wall in the library.

During the latter years of Grier's life, he became physically disabled. His physical disability and the lack of handicapped facilities at the church denied him an opportunity to attend Reynolds Temple Church therefore: a memorial ramp will be constructed in his honor.

All memorial contributions and donations may be made in care of Reynolds Temple C.M.E. Church, P.O. Box 16444, Winston-Salem, N.C. 27115-6444.

Exhibit chronicles history of WSSU

The Diggs Gallery at Winston-Salem State University is commemorating the university's first 100 years with a new exhibition, "Bearing the Test: A Historical Exhibition Celebrating WSSU's Centennial," Sept. 24 — Dec. 12, 1992.

Photographs, documents and other memorabilia trace the founding of Slater Industrial Academy in 1892, by Dr. Simon Green Atkins, to the present-day WSSU.

The public is invited to the opening reception on Thursday September 24, from 5-8 p.m. The hosts for the evening are Chancellor Cleon F. Thompson Jr. and his wife Edwina White Thompson. Local artist James Huff will also be present for a signing of his limited edition Centennial Poster commissioned by the WSSU National Alumni Association.

Included in the exhibition are the original campus bell, a model of the university's first building, furniture for Dr. Atkins's personal collection, and academic regalia worn by him and each of the succeeding presidents and chancellors.

"Bearing the Test" was coined by Dr. Atkins in an early letter to the U.S. Commissioner of Education concerning education at Slater Industrial Academy.

The letter reads: "We are making special efforts to evaluate the standard of our school all along the line. I am convinced that the teaching forces of my race must be elevated, and I think it is the duty of our higher institutions to make this demand. We are determined that every student who comes out with our stamp upon him shall bear the test and shall by all means add to the moral and intellectual power of the race."

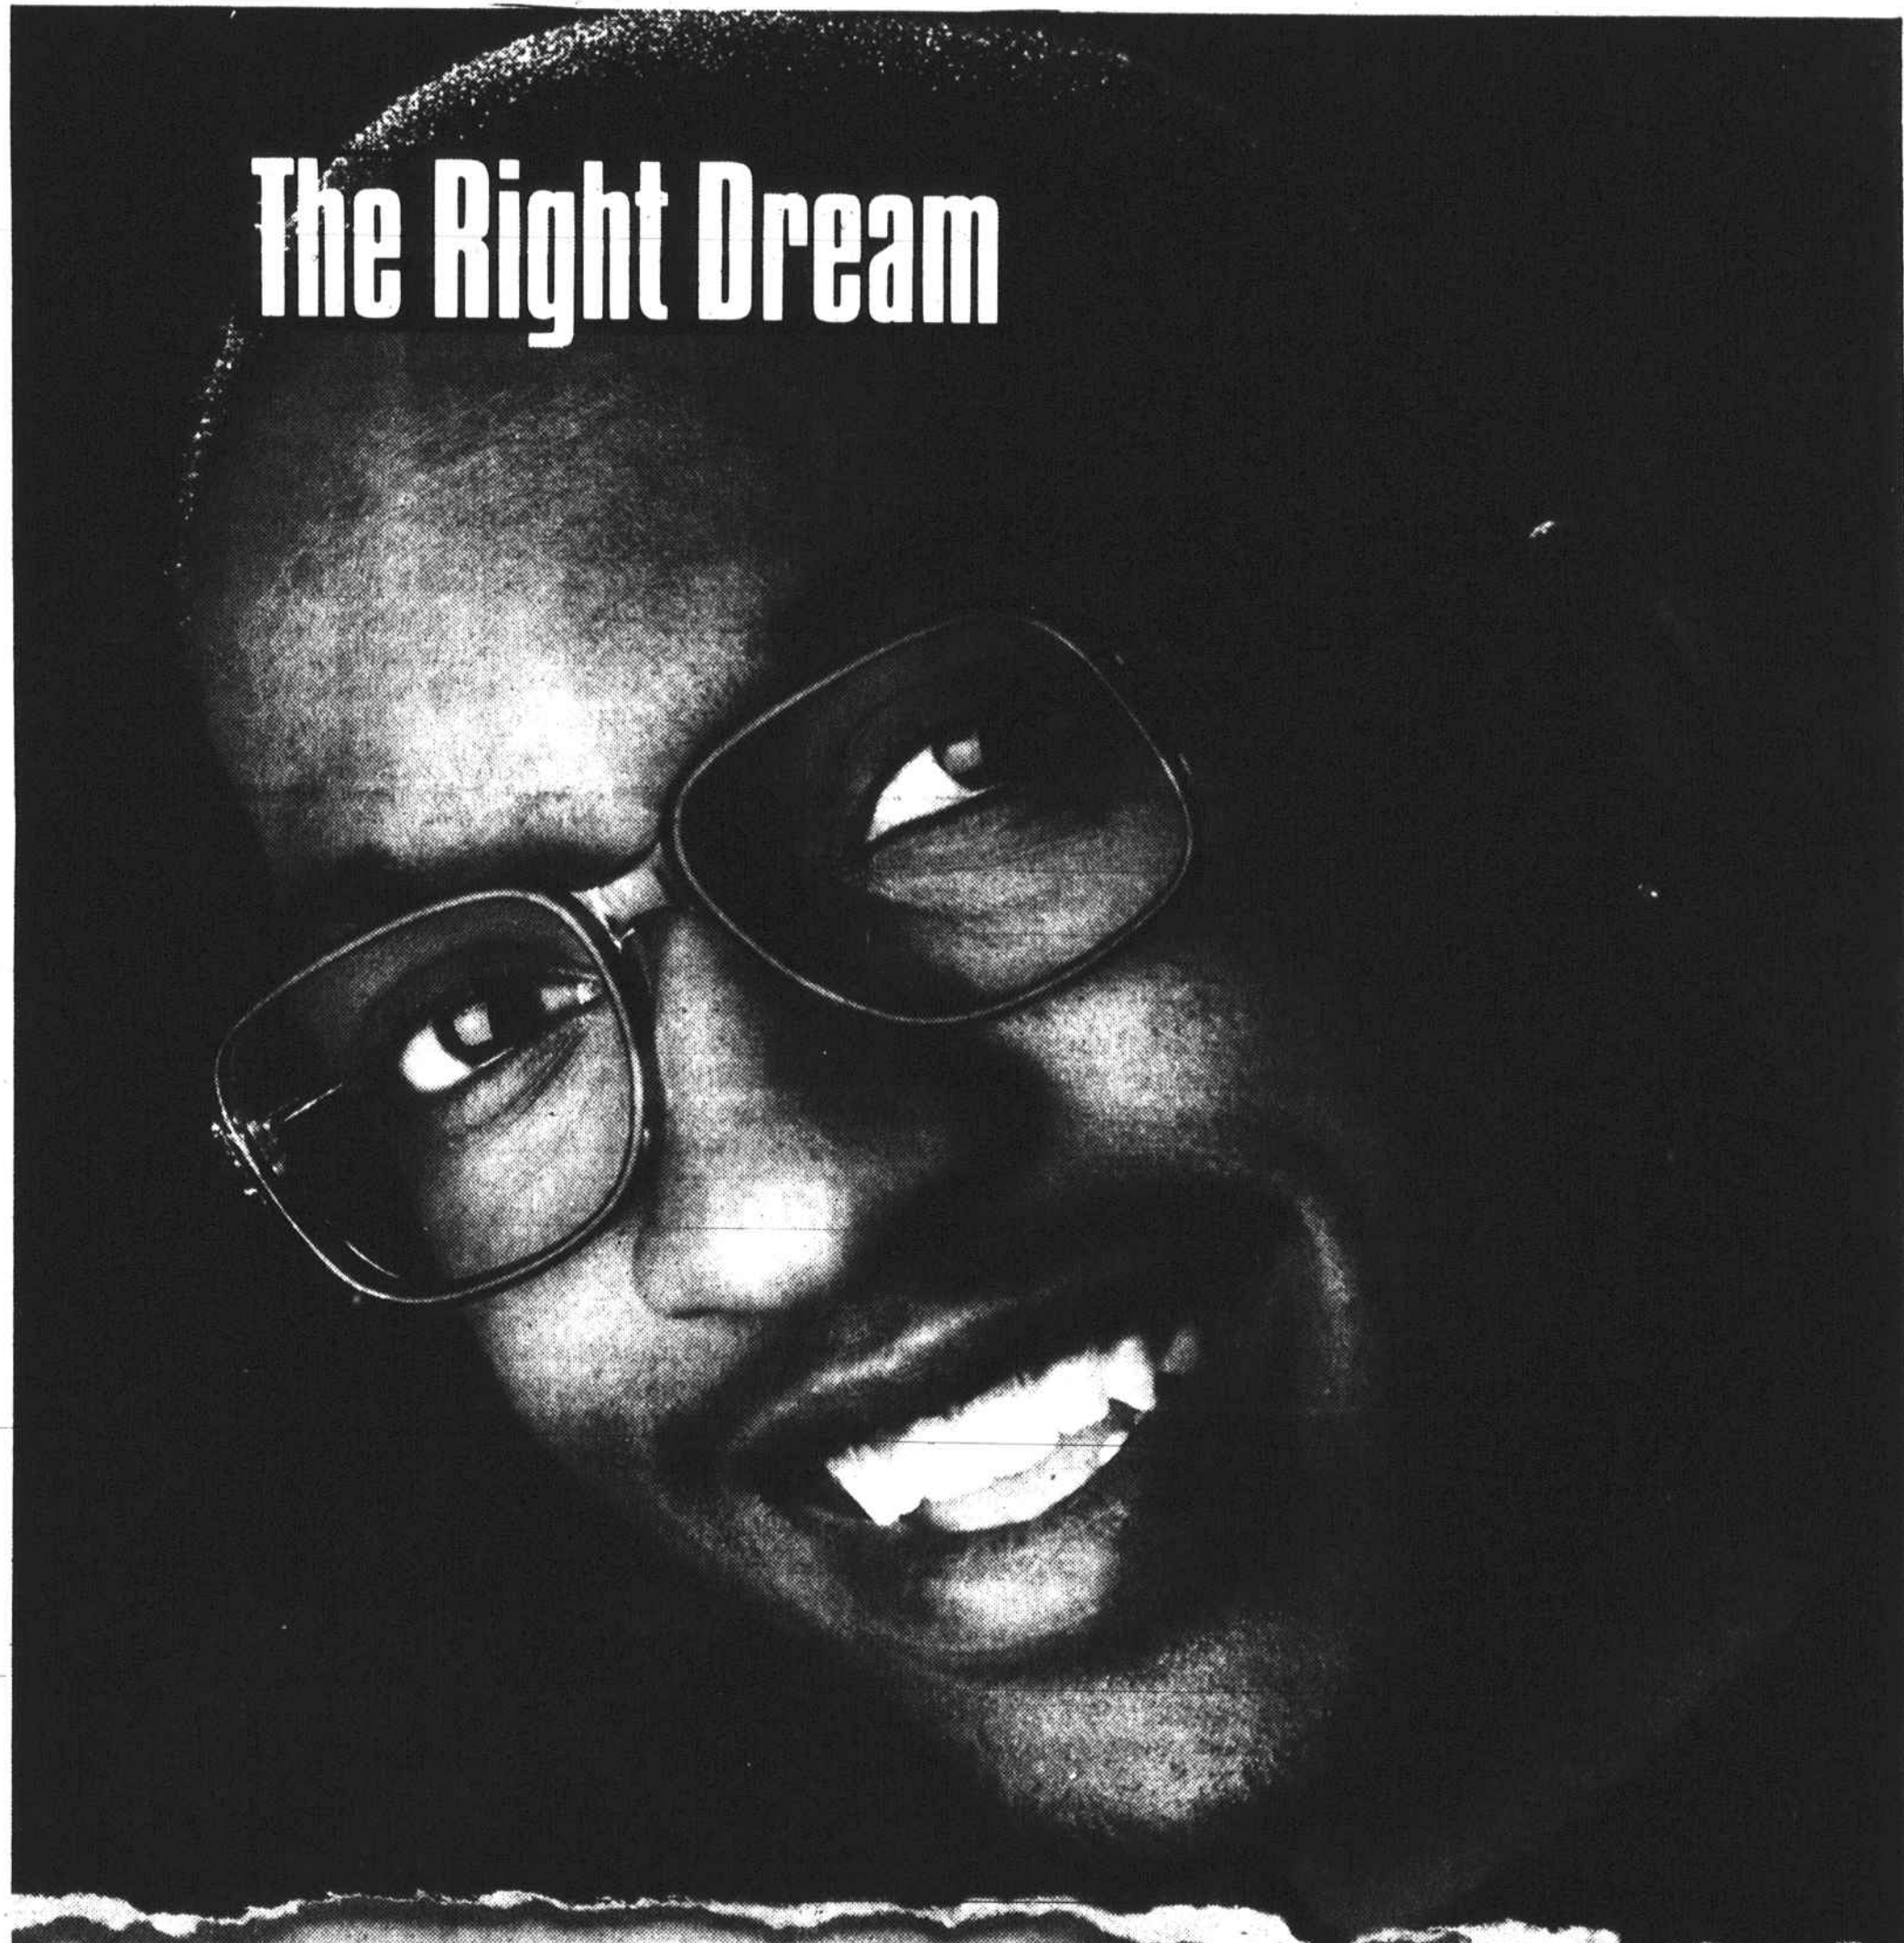

Concurrent with the Centennial exhibit is "Connections," an exhibit of works by the university's art faculty, alumni, and Diggs Gallery board members.

The curators are Kathy Williams, Mackey Bane and Mitzi Shewmake, the former director of the gallery and a retired WSSU art professor.

Also on display is the university's time capsule, which will be buried on Dec. 6 to preserve artifacts and documents from the year-long Centennial celebration.

The Diggs Gallery is open Tuesdays through Saturdays from 11 a.m. to 5 p.m. Admission is free. For more information call the gallery at 750-2458.

The Right Dream

When Derrick Jenkins' eighth-grade homeroom was "adopted" by Atlanta's PROJECT SUCCESS program, even Derrick would hardly have placed himself at the head of the class. Far from it, in fact.

But with the help of this tutoring and mentoring program, run by 100 Black Men of Atlanta and funded in part by Coors, Derrick, once an underachiever, raised his skills up to and beyond his grade level. Today, as a freshman at Voorhees College in Denmark, South Carolina, he has avoided the pitfalls of illiteracy and opened up a whole world of opportunities.

People like Derrick Jenkins and the members of 100 Black Men of Atlanta are the reason Coors has committed 40 million dollars to help teach Americans to read. If you want to learn to be a better reader or teach someone else, just call 1-800-626-4601 and be part of the dream. Literacy. Pass it on.
