Freedom of Choice Is Yours

If you have ridden out in what used to be the rural areas you will find the communities changing! There's a grocery store and small shopping centers on almost every corner. The farm land is being sold to create housing developments with beautiful and expensive homes. Little towns and villages are becoming incorporated and independent. No longer are the people in these villages laughed at and looked upon as not being exposed to up-to-date information. Many of these once rural people are educated and professional in their fields. Those who are not educated are abreast of the latest trends, techniques, and things that are happening within our society.

Every citizen should become familiar with his neighborhood, try to improve it and get involved in making some of the decisions for the betterment of the community. Since you have a choice to live where you desire, make the most of your choice become involved in your community.

Freedom of choice for all people to live where they choose to live may be important to you. Considerable effort then is required to maintain as many attractive communities as possible with adequate housing, jobs, recreational opportunities, and other high quality community services. We must decide what we want for our cities, suburbs, small towns, and rural areas and begin now to provide new, creative thought in planning for communities of tomorrow.

The economic, social, political, and cultural strength of our communities and cities arises from the variety of skilled, talented, enterprising, and public-spirited people we find in them. Look about you. You as an individual and you as a group are making choices every day that affect the future of your community. Do your choices promote orderly growth and development? Are you winning the battle against blight, deterioration of housing, noise, congestion, loss of population, decline in economic activity, and adjusting to technological change?

We are just beginning to turn our attention to ways of improving communities. If they are really for people, decisions on the living and working environment must receive top priority.

Convenient access to work, design of streets, availability of community facilities and services, attractive residential areas and coordination of activities are important functions the community must foster.

These are some of the important choices facing you.

- Will your community grow or decline?
- Are you really concerned over the appearance, vitality, quality of life in your community?
- Are you willing to accept controls on land use and housing distribution required for orderly growth?

Are you willing to pay additional taxes to provide more revenue

The people of North Carolina have a tradition of choosing the best course. If communities and individuals keep faith with this tradition, you will build communities for tomorrow that are dynamic, attractive, and where people like to live, work and play.
