NCNW to Sponsor Dinner Theatre

The National Council of Negro Women (NCNW), Winston-Salem Section, will sponsor a Dinner Theatre featuring the Mt. Olive Baptist Drama Club's presentation of its original musical "Let God Be God" on June 19 at 6:30 p.m. in the Shiloh Center auditorium, located at 1125 Highland Ave.

"Let God Be God" has received high accolade from previous productions. The play won the Dove Award in 1992.

The reality of the topics underscored in the musical draws attention to some of the causes and effects of drug use. The musical reveals the story of two families struggling to keep their families together. The everyday pressures of life cause one young man to find temporary comfort in drugs, while his sister looks to Jesus.

The play is written by Michael Gray, assistant minister of music at Mt. Olive Baptist Church. The Rev. Charles Gray, pastor, directs the play. Music will be performed by the Mt. Olive Mass Choir, directed by Arthur Wright, minister of music.

For tickets call Thelma Pigford, president of the local chapter of NCNW, at 723-3314.

Q&A with Host of Bobby Jones Hour

Bobby Jones, host and executive producer of the "Bobby Jones Gospel Show" and producer of "Video Gospel," has been recognized across the country as a talented performer, skilled professional and a successful entrepreneur in the gospel music industry. In addition, Jones is an educator, holding a bachelor's, masters and doctorate degree in education.

In the following interview, Jones talks about his future in gospel, his career and what drives him to excel.

Q: How do you feel the "Bobby Jones Gospel Show" has influenced the gospel music industry?

Jones: "Based on the amount of communications that I get from people through the mail, from telephone calls, face-to-face conversations, and my own suggestions, we have set the precedent for gospel music by helping to develop a standard professionalism. In every aspect of the gospel music industry, we have had an impact on presentation, delivery, instrumentation, and we offer a tremendous platform for other gospel artists to display their talents. At this point, BET is the only network that has supported this type of gospel platform."

Q: Where do you see yourself in the next 5-10 years?

Jones: "I would like to continue my work at BET and expand to have a syndicated show in other markets. I am also in the process of developing the Diamond Festival, which will be similar to the Cannes Film Festival in France, to establish some elitism within the gospel music industry. I hope to have another book completed on gospel music, continue my contributions, and sit at the helm of the industry and direct what needs to happen."

Q: How does your show tie in to the needs of the African-American community?

Jones: "The first component is spirituality. There are five tenets of life that we experience, and spirituality is one. I think that we have a great impact on the spiritual lives of African Americans. We also make an impact through education, and we provide to inform and educate people on the lifestyle of gospel."

"Financially, we give back to the record labels and artists who produce gospel music. Politically, we are always in the forefront of providing information which relates to our activities and the rest of the world. Socially, we bring people together from all over the world."

Q: What message do you have for young people today trying to find their "vision?"

Jones: "To the young and old, I say remember to maintain a balance in life. Always know that life is a series of experiences, and we make judgments based on those experiences and the information around us. Never take life so seriously that you can't be positive, and yet take it seriously enough so that you can recognize these experiences. Learn from them and be prepared to develop yourself. Always stay focused and informed. Decisions without information leads us to uncomfortable situations. Nothing is promised to us, but whatever comes to you, be prepared to receive it and you will find yourself placed in better positions in life."
