Questions & Answers on recovering from grief *
 Questions asked during bereavement counseling are answered by the editor of Afterloss, the grief-recovery letter.

Q. I have this fear of forgetting my loved one now that he is gone. Laughing and socializing with friends seems disloyal.

A. So many people fail to get on with life because of the feelings you describe. Be assured that you will never forget someone who was so much a part of your life. After a while the good memories grow dearer and the not so good ones fade away. Often we feel guilty to be alive when new opportunities and happiness come our way. This is called "survivor's guilt." This is a normal reaction. And it will pass.
