

Local Beauticians Sponsor Community Concert in Fayetteville

The Winston-Salem Beauticians and Cosmetologist #2 sponsored Save Our Youth Community Choir in concert in Fayetteville to open the North Carolina State Beauticians and Cosmetologist Convention.

Minnie Ervin, is the president of chapter #2 and state supervisor of the Youth Department, was in charge of the opening of the convention on Saturday night.

More than 50 children were involved in the concert.

Chapter #2 would like to thank Brunson Medley of Travel Tours Bus Company of Hamlet and Lenwood Gerald of T.B.M. Bus Company of Winston-Salem for their support in helping to make the trip possible, through their generous offer of discount rates. Ann Motz, Catherine Kennedy and Helen Hairston also helped to make the trip possible.

After the concert Mrs. Snipes, state president, and members of chapter #2 gave a complete dinner for all the children.

Ervin would like to thank all parents who went on this trip and David Allen, director of the group for making it possible.

Thanks to all chapter #2 members.

The Save Our Youth Community Choir get ready to leave to go to Fayetteville to open for the N.C. State Beauticians and Cosmetologist Convention.

The children wait to board the bus for the convention.

Tips on Finding a Job

A lot of people are seeking jobs. The college graduates are racing to industries and other agencies to find employment. There are limited jobs and there is a lot of competition in the job market. These are some important tips if you are looking for a job:

One of the most dreaded experience that job seekers have today

This means a lot of work, but it pays off.

Go to the library and read everything that been's recently written in newspapers about the company. Read magazine articles about the company. Ask the public relations office for their latest brochures and newsletters. Then when the interviewer mentions a is the job interview. It is like having an abscessed wisdom tooth pulled, because you are constantly wondering what is going to happen next.

The first step to getting a job is to write a good resume. They should have no problem about this, because you can go to the library and read helpful books on the subject such as: Help Wanted, Female by Alice Gore King, or the Professional Resume and Job Search Guide by Harold W. Dickhut and Marvel J. Davis.

Write only one or two pages and make your curriculum vitae look clean and tidy by using wide margins and lots of white space. Don't overdo it. Avoid trying to stand out in the crowd by acting too individualistic. Never try to be clever in seeking a job. Example: One man sent his resume plus a photo of himself in a Superman Costume. You know he failed to fly. Another eager young lady mailed her resume to the company president, then cornered him on the doorstep of his home one evening to ask if he had received it. The president had not seen the letter and was outraged that she should bother him at home.

Always send original copies.

newsy topic, you can say I read about that in the newspapers or in magazines. Get your facts straight. One girl blew an interview when she said I want to work for you because you're the second largest company in America. The company was the first. Get the company's name right.

Dress as you would on the job. Choice of dress depends on whether you are applying for a job in a bar, a disco, a bank, or as a secretary.

Always carry a briefcase to help you look efficient and keep you from having fumble through your purse for several minutes looking for your resume. Even if you have already sent one in, take along another.

Use body language. According to a recent study, an interviewer often decides whether you will get the job or not during the first four minutes. Act positive, cheerful, and confident. Walk in and shake hands warmly. Take the chair nearest the interviewer. Avoid nervous habits like nibbling your nails or fidgeting your hair. Sit straight and look interested. Meet the interviewer eye to eye as you are talking, but don't stare.

Don't be wishy-washy.
