Clinton Names Blacks to Physical Fitness Council

Washington, D.C. - President Clinton has appointed three African-American sports, fitness, and community leaders as members of the President's Council of Physical Fitness and Sports.

The African-American appointees are Ralph Boston, an Olympic long-jump gold medalist, women's pro tennis star Zina Garrison-Jackson and former pro football player Calvin Hill.

The president also appointed 12 other council members from diverse backgrounds. In selecting the 15 appointees to the 20 member council, President Clinton sought individuals from a wide range of backgrounds with outstanding records of leadership and community involvement.

The three newly appointed African Americans will join PCPFS co-chair Joyner and Tom McMillen, who were appointed by President Clinton in June of last year. All of the newly appointed African Americans have been active in their communities, working on behalf of inner-city and disadvantaged citizens.

In his remarks at the May 31 White House Rose Garden swearing in ceremony, Clinton recognized the importance of sports and recreation activities in child development.

"When you're involved in teamwork, you learn how to deal with the disappointment of defeat, and frustration, you even learn how to manage unfairness. These are important things, lessons in life that have to be learned."

Ralph Boston, of Atlanta and Tennessee, is a gold medal winner and silver medal winner in the long jump at the 1960 Olympics in Rome, where he surpassed Jesse Owens' 25 year long jump record with a mark of 26 feet, 11 1/4 inches. He won a silver medal in Tokyo in 1964 and a bronze medal in Mexico City in 1968, making him the only long jumper in the world to have won a set of Olympic gold, silver and bronze medals. Boston also won gold medals at the 1963 and 1967 pan American Games, setting new Pan American records at both.

Garrison-Jackson of Houston, Texas, was unable to attend the White House Rose Garden ceremony because she was competing in the French Open tennis tournament in Paris, an event she flew directly to from her high school graduation ceremony in 1982, and which was her first pro tournament. Garrison-Jackson is one of the highest ranking American women in professional tennis, and also the most prominent African-American women on the pro circuit. A Houston native, she launched The Zina Garrison All Court Tennis Academy, an inner-city youth program, in 1992. In 1993, she added another program to her agenda of community service by signing on with Kid Care, Inc. in Houston, an organization that delivers hot food to homeless and indigent children.

Her professional career has had many highlights, among them triumphantly representing the United States in the 1988 Olympics in Seoul, Korea with a bronze medal in singles and a gold medal in doubles. By 1981 she was the number one ranked junior player in the world, having won both the Junior U.S. Open and the Junior Wimbledon.

Hill of Great Falls, Va. and born in Baltimore, is a former professional football player for the Dallas Cowboys, the Washington Redskins and the Cleveland Browns. He was selected to participate in the NFL Pro Bowl in 1969, 1972, 1973 and 1974, and he played in Super Bowl V and VI. Since leaving a post of Vice-President at the Baltimore Orioles in February of this year, Hill has continued several consulting activities that he has pursued for several years.

In addition, he is developing several entrepreneurial projects in sports and sports marketing. He attended Riverdale Country School in New York City on a scholarship, and completed his education at Yale University, graduating in 1969. He also attended Southern Methodist University's Perkins School of Theology.

Griffith Joyner, of Mission Viejo, Calif., has been Co-Chair of the PCPFS since last June when she and Tom McMillen, a retired professional basketball player and former Maryland congressman, were appointed by President Clinton. Joyner has elevated women's track to a new level with her three Gold and one Silver medal-winning performance in the 1988 Summer Olympics. Her World Record times in the 100 and 200-meter events, have earned her the title "World Fastest Woman."
