

National Youth Program

A talent show brought the curtain down on this year's National Youth Sports Program at Winston-Salem State University, with one of the participants singing the Black National Anthem. The five-week program offers swimming, softball, tennis and volleyball along with classroom work in violence prevention, hygiene and drug prevention.

Henighan Kicks Back

where he learned his peers have been playing basketball since 3 or 4 years of age, and many play year-round now that they are approaching college age.

"I think to catch up to those guys who have been playing year-round for such a long time, I have to do it too," he said.

Kaye Henighan, a public-school teacher and one of four finalists for Forsyth County Teacher of the Year, fully supports her son's basketball adventures.

"I think he has done a good job keeping basketball in perspective," she said. "He is academically prepared to go to college even if he never picks up another basketball or earns a basketball scholarship."

Henighan is a coach's dream: He is team oriented on the floor and his coaches, whether it's Parkland's Tom Muse or a future college coach, never has to worry about Henighan's eligibility. He ranks in the upper 25 percent of his high-school class with a 3.05 overall GPA and a 3.15 mark in the core courses required by the NCAA. He has far surpassed the 700 SAT score needed for college freshman eligibility with an 1130 SAT score. Off the court, the 17-year-old has participated in Honors Choirs, Ebony Pride, German Club, Key Club, Association of Marketing Students (treasurer), DARE, and he was a Sophomore and Junior Board member.

When he is on the court, Henighan's game is whatever the coach wants.

"On our Parkland team I knew I had to be one of the top scorers (15.5 ppg as a junior) and probably guard the other team's best guard or small forward, basically do whatever the team needs," he said. "At Parkland, everyone knew what they had to do to help the team win and that is what we did."

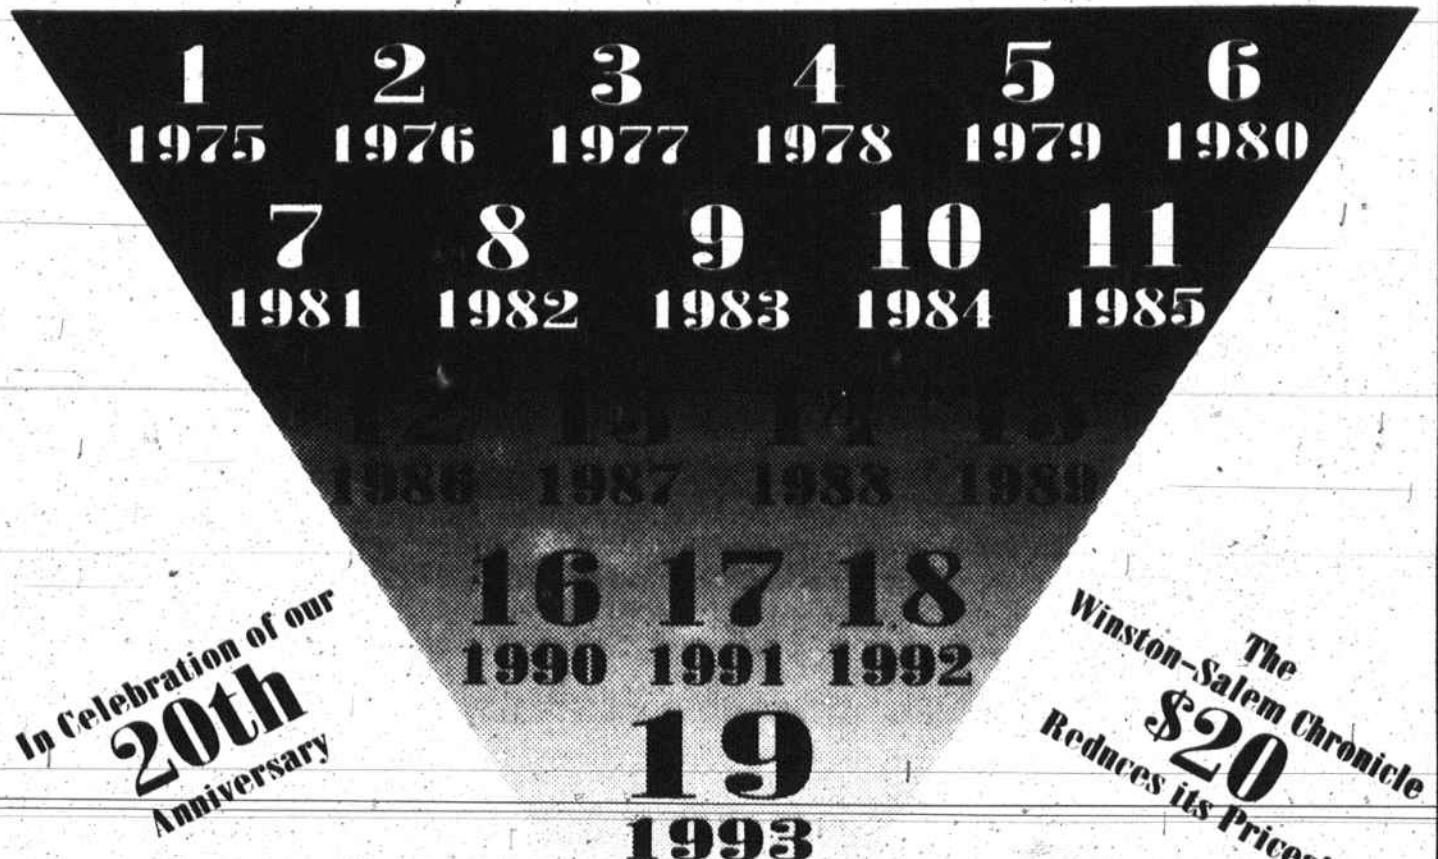

His role for the Durham Eagles is different. He isn't counted on to score as much and he doesn't start. It is also harder as a point guard to lead a team that is together infrequently.

"In AAU it is hard because you come together for a short time," he said. "In practice you find out what the coach needs from you and that is what you do."

And you do it until football season starts.
