Education Team Wins Virtual Case Competition

An student education team from Winston-Salem State University won this year's Virtual Case Competition.

Ten members were notified Tuesday of their accomplishment and will be sent copies of judges comments and be allowed to offer feedback for future competitions.

The competition, run by Virginia's Commonwealth Center for the Education of Teachers, was put on the Internet this year saving a trip to Charlottesville, Va where it has been held in the past.

The Virtual competition

requires teams of students enrolled in teaching programs to read a fictional case about problems that a schoolteacher may encounter in the classroom.

Team members must decide what issues are raised and how they would deal with them.

This year's case centered around a student named Kate who is from a troubled home.

She is ignored by classmates and often refuses to complete assignments.
