Broach Harnesses Some of June's Power favor of the strike, but added, "If we had to, I'd have gone out on strike as well if it was in our contract."

Asked about the lack of attendance in the majors in the aftermath of the strike, Broach said he thought the strike was "a good thing. We can't get as much support here in Winston-Salem as I think we should get," he said. "We have one of the best teams in the league, although we should be winning more."

"I also don't think a fan should have to pay for an autograph," Broach stated. "They come out to see us play and we should be willing to give something back in return."

He does feel the pay in the minors should be more than it is, however. "With all we have to put up with, especially those long bus rides, I think we could get a little more money." But he was quick to point out, "Money isn't an issue with me. I like to play baseball."

Broach visited a local elementary school during the year and spoke with the children about little leagues. "I told them to stay in school and get good grades," he said. "And while I spoke with more white kids, a lot of black kids play baseball as much as any other sport," he said.
