Ennis moves on from FTCC

Cynthia Ennis, like a lot of people, never thought she would be able to make it through college and get a degree. "I was just an average student in high school," said Ennis. But, Ennis, like a lot of people who take their first big step and enroll in college, found that she could do more than she had ever imagined. At the summer graduation of Forsyth Technical Community College, Ennis served as one of six marshals. All of the marshals had completed the first year of their two-year degree and all had 4.0 grade point averages.

For Ennis, it all began 16 years after graduation from high school. "My husband left me just before Christmas," she said. "I moved here (Winston-Salem) in 1992. I thought about being a stay-at-home mom, because my daughter was just starting kindergarten. But I also knew I had always wanted to go back to school and get a degree.

It was then that she made the decision to enroll at Forsyth Tech in the Microcomputer Systems Technology program. "Once I enrolled," said Ennis, "I knew I wanted to finish my degree, graduate with honors and finish at the top of my class. This was my purpose and my goal." "I received a lot of moral support," she continued, "from students, teachers and from my family. I am impressed with the school and have been blessed with the people God put in my path."

When Ennis first came to Forsyth Tech, she thought that at the end of the two years, with her associate degree in hand, she would get a job and go to work. Now, with encouragement from her instructors and her own interest in pursuing a career with management opportunities, she is planning to continue her education and complete her bachelor's degree. "I'm not sure where I want to go (to school), maybe Gardner Webb, High Point or UNC-G," said Ennis. Regardless of the school she chooses, there is little doubt in anyone's mind, even hers, that she will earn her bachelor's degree and fulfill that dream she never thought could come true.

Dedication of historical marker set at WSSU

The North Carolina Highway Historical Marker Program will unveil a new marker on the Winston-Salem State University campus Friday, Oct. 4, at 8:45 a.m. at the Francis L. Atkins Building.

The marker commemorates the university's founder, Dr. Simon Green Atkins, who established the institution as Slater Industrial Academy in 1892.

A graduate of Livingstone College, Atkins came to Winston-Salem in 1890 to oversee the Depot School, which was the largest public school for blacks in the state. He was a believer in the notion that good housing conditions and home ownership were important to good education, and that belief led him, in 1891, to salvage a neglected residential section to be used to build homes for black families.

That neighborhood became known as Columbian Heights. By 1892, enough families had settled in there to justify the construction of a school. That school became the Slater Industrial Academy, opened with 25 pupils and one teacher in a one-room home structure. Envisioned for "training for head, hand and heart," Slater offered both academic and industrial courses and placed a strong emphasis on teacher education.

Dr. Atkins took a leave of absence from the presidency from 1904 to 1913 to travel around the country and abroad raising money for the A.M.E. Zion Church.

He returned as head of the Slater School in 1913 and stayed until shortly before his death.

Dr. Harris to keynote at WSSU Founders' Day

Dr. William Ussery Harris, regional executive director of the Middle States Regional Office of the College Board, will deliver the keynote address at Winston-Salem State University's Founder's Day observance Friday, Oct. 4 at 9:45 a.m.

Harris has written and presented extensively on such topics as "The Expanding Reliance on Standardized Testing," "Recent Trends in Teacher Competency Testing," "Public Education - The Answer to America's Future" and "Preparing Blacks for the Teaching Force."

A native of Charlotte, Harris received his bachelor's degree in elementary education from Winston-Salem State University in 1958. He furthered his education at Indiana University, where he received a master's degree in elementary education. He also holds a doctorate in educational administration from The Union Institute of Cincinnati, Ohio.

His previous experience includes positions as area director for the teacher program area and program director for the National Teacher Examinations, program director for the College Board Admissions Testing Program and executive associate to the vice president for College Board Programs.

Dr. Harris' professional affiliations include Phi Delta Kappa, the American Educational Research Association and the Association for Supervision and Curriculum Development. He is a member of the Commission on Higher Education and the Committee on Evaluation for the Middle States Association of Schools and Colleges.

WSSU's Founder's Day is held annually to recognize the accomplishments of Simon Green Atkins, who founded the institution in 1892 as Slater Industrial Academy.
