The Winston-Salem Chronicle has announced plans to name its high school varsity football Player of the Year award in honor of Gary Tyrone "Skooter" Gregg, Jr., a former football player at Carver High School, who was killed in a car accident on Nov. 15.

The Chronicle, which is expanding its coverage to include varsity high school sports in Forsyth County, is also honoring a "Super 25," the top players from Forsyth County, to coincide with the selection of the top player in the Winston-Salem/Forsyth County school system.

Gregg, a starting cornerback on the Yellow-jackets' team, was active in several school, community and church activities. He was a dedicated member of the Carver football program for the past three seasons.

Coach Keith Wilkes of Carver said Gregg typified the concept of student-athlete that most coaches try to get their players to emulate.

"He was a good kid, athlete and person," Wilkes said. "He was a silent leader. There were a lot of things about him that the coaching staff and the players admired. He was very respectful of the coaches and teachers. No one here has ever had any problems out of him. He came from a good family. You could tell that the kid was

HAWS: The Housing that Bill Built!

▲ Housing Authority Board Chairman Bill Andrews

By WILLIAM H. TURNER Ph.D.
Special to the Chronicle

Bill Andrews' name is a "public" household word in Winston-Salem, as in Winston-Salem Housing Authority. Andrews has been on the Housing Authority board for a decade, serving as its chairman for the past three years.

From 1965 to 1985 when he retired, Andrews was director of community services for HAWS. For five years prior to his start at HAWS, he was a key program person with the HUD-sponsored Redevelopment Commission of Winston-Salem. He considers his part in signing Art Milligan Jr. as executive director as one of the high points in his long career. Public service will lose both Milligan — to the city of Tampa — and the man who attracted him to Winston, Andrews, 66 — to retirement bliss with his wife, Gwen, their two children and four grandchildren.

Mayor Martha Wood and the HAWS board have quite a daunting task to replace both Art and Bill. Bill Andrews said "I have no bones to pick, no axes to grind, and full pride with what we've accomplished over the past three decades."

Andrews' commitment to public service — like the HAWS board chairmanship — seems rather natural. He is a Winston-Salem native, whose father, D.W., was among the

The hostesses served four meats: prime rib, chicken, roast turkey, and baked ham. Hot items on the dessert menu were sweet potato pie, pound cake, and coconut cake, but the main entree for this formal dinner was love.

"We are here on a love mission," said Ricky Wilson. "The Young family has made it possible for us to share our love with Dr. Malloy and Dr. Jones. We hope that our love will radiate throughout this city for our brothers."

The dinner guests responded with cheers, laughter and applause when she presented a dramatic reading of the poem "The Good Ole Days" by the late Eugene Bass.

Wilson served as the emcee for the annual Christmas party that Fred and Donley Young have sponsored for the last five years at their home. The semi-formal affair was held on Saturday, Dec. 7 at the home of the Young family. The major purpose of this year's affair was to honor Dr. H. Rembert Malloy and Dr. James M. Jones for their service to the Winston-Salem community.

Special guests with them included Dorothy Jones, wife of Dr. Jones, Thelma Hines, friend of Malloy, Meta McClennon, and Cora J. Grogan, sisters of Dr. Jones. Mary A. Blakney of Santa Barbara, Calif., was the video specialist. Dr. Sam Tyson, an optometrist in Greensboro, also came to support the doctors.

A native of Hamlet, N.C., Malloy received his bachelor's degree at Johnson C. Smith University. He completed graduate study in bacteriology at the University of Chicago. In 1939 he received his medical degree from Howard University and began his internship at Kate Bitting Reynolds Memorial Hospital.

Jones, a native of Winston-Salem, completed his undergraduate work at Talledega College in Alabama. He received his medical degree from Meharry Medical College and began his family practice in 1960.

Hill receives scholarship for academic excellence and community service

By MAURICE CROCKER
Community News Reporter

For 17-year-old Yakhia Hill, hard work, dedication to academics, and faith in God, are three things that have brought her one step closer to her goal of being a pediatrician.

Hill, a senior at East Forsyth High School, recently received the Horatio Alger Association Scholarship.

"I think this is wonderful," she said, as she blushed, trying to contain her happiness.

Hill said she was ecstatic and considered the nomination an honor.

According to Hill, she knew her teachers nominated her for the scholarship, but never thought she would be the recipient.

As the recipient, Hill will receive a $5,000 scholarship toward her tuition at Howard University, where she plans to major in biology and pre-medical studies.

"Before I was nominated for the scholarship,

Audrey Lamkin poses with her daughter Yakhia Hill and Joseph Dudley, at a reception held in honor of Yakhia's achievements.

I knew very little about it, so I had no idea I would become a finalist and eventually win it," she said.

Hill, along with two other students, was nominated for the scholarship by teachers and scholarship committee members.

H.B. Harris Jr., Hill's social studies teacher, said among her strongest assets were honesty and an open and willing desire to excel.

Harris also said he feels that Hill will lead a successful life, because she is compassionate and a mature individual.

Hill's extracurricular activities include involvement in the Anchor Club, the National Honor Society, and the East Forsyth Gospel Choir, of which she is vice president, to name a few.

Aside from her many academic activities, Hill finds time to volunteer at Bowman Gray Hospital as a Patient's Aid.

"Volunteering at the hospital has always been something I wanted to do," she said. "But after my grandfather died of cancer, I felt it was a way for me to give back to those in need."

Audrey Lamkin, Hill's mother, said she has always tried to teach her daughter the importance of helping others and being involved in the community.

Lamkin said Hill has always set a good example and has been a great role model for her younger sisters.

"We place all of our trust in God, so I pray that my other daughters will follow in Yakhia's foot steps," she said. "I think they are on their way."

During the afternoon assembly, the students received words of encouragement and sound advice from another Horatio Alger Award winner.
