

More WSSU Foundation board resignations expected and the university. Chancellor Alvin Schexnider commissioned the report from Joyner Consulting Inc.

Brandquist's resignation letter said those requests, if granted, would be detrimental to the university, and would make "the whole foundation ... almost a toy of the chancellor."

Brandquist said that the foundation had canceled fund raising activities for this year because of lack of university input. Marshall Bass, chairman of the foundation board, said that the organization had raised $20 million for the university since 1990; up until last year, the foundation worked with the university to do so, he added.

The position of vice chancellor for development, the party that works closest with the founation, has been vacant for the past year.

Schexnider said later that he did not want to fill the vacancy until he resolved matters with the foundation. Schexnider did not elaborate further except to say that the problems had been going on for about a year.

Schexnider assumed duties as chancellor of Winston-Salem State University in January 1996. Since his appointment as chancellor, he has conducted several fund raising events at his home without input from the foundation.

An ad hoc committee, comprised of several foundation board members, recently completed a report containing recommendations for restructuring the board. The report, which will be presented at the April 25 meeting, includes responses to the trustees requests.

Powell keynotes annual dinner of African-American think tank

president of public affairs for Philip Morris Companies Inc.; Virgis Colbert, senior vice president for Miller Brewing Co.; Milton Bins, chairman of Council of 100; and Joseph A. Baptiste, of the National Association for the Advancement of Haitians. Founded in 1970, the center is the nation's preeminent African-American "think-tank," focusing on enhancing African-American influence in the political, economic and policy arenas. Philip Morris was the Center's first corporate sponsor and the company's chairman, Geoffrey C. Bible, was vice chairman for the dinner.

Drill Sergeant from Georgia convicted of adultery, and four-and-a-half years in jail when sentenced on those counts.

A former Army trainee, who is no longer in the Army, testified Monday that she had sex with Daniels at least four times while she was at Fort Leonard Wood. She said she couldn't remember specific dates, but said at least three times they had sex on a desk.

Daniels told her to keep their relationship a secret, she said.

"He said that he would get in trouble, and I'd probably get in trouble too, so just deny it," she said.

On cross examination, the woman admitted she has lied on every statement she's given to military investigators since the alleged incidents in November. She said she was trying to hide her relationship with Staff Sgt. John R. Fahlgren, 35, of Chicago.

Fahlgren last week pleaded guilty to failure to obey a lawful general regulation, sodomy, larceny, obstruction of justice, possession of an illegal substance and adultery.

Another woman, a friend of the first, said Daniels asked her to join him and her friend in three-way sex, but she refused. She said Daniels got her and her friend off mess hall duty so they could all have sex together.

Both women admitted they had a history of breaking regulations while in training, and lying to cover each other's tracks.

Three other noncommissioned officers at Fort Wood have been convicted or pleaded guilty to sex-related charges involving trainees. All three were sentenced to a bad conduct discharge and prison time.

Eleven other Fort Wood non-commissioned officers were charged in the military sex scandal, which first came to light in November at the Army Ordnance Center at Aberdeen, Md. Twelve instructors there were charged with criminal sexual misconduct.

At Fort Leonard Wood, four more court martials were scheduled in May and June, and one soldier is awaiting a trial date. The six other cases involved less serious offenses and were at different stages of investigation.
