Hanes Hosiery to host local competition for 'Nike 3 For All'

By SAM DAVIS
THE CHRONICLE

Tim Grant moved quickly when he received a call in October from old friend Warren Grayson about a basketball competition designed exclusively for girls.

Grant, district recreation supervisor for the City of Winston-Salem and former assistant basketball coach at Winston-Salem, liked the idea from the start.

Grayson, who works in community development with the Charlotte Hornets, told Grant about the 3 For All basketball skills competition. The competition, sponsored by Nike and Lady Foot Locker, gives girls aged 10-17 and opportunity to test their skills against each other in three different drills.

"He asked me if we would be interested in doing this and it sort of snowballed from there," said Grant, who was subsequently named the site manager for the local competition which will be held on Jan. 22 at Hanes Hosiery Recreation Center. "I saw it as a unique opportunity for young ladies. With the attention of women's athletics and women in sports today, I saw this as a good chance for us to do something positive with our young ladies."

This is the fourth year that the competition has been held. Last year more than 10,000 girls participated in 3 For All across the country in 12 different cities. This year three new cities (Orlando, Charlotte and Houston) have been added to that total. The competition at Hanes Hosiery is part of the preliminary competitions for the Charlotte site. Participants will compete in three different age divisions (10-12, 13-14 and 15-17). The format for the competition includes the Super Shot - a timed shooting event with several selected spots on the court, Speed Dribble - a timed dribbling event, and Free Throws - 15 free throws. The winners, individuals in each of the three competitions and overall winners, from Winston-Salem will advance to Charlotte, where they will go against winners from nine other cities in the Carolinas.

"Our staff is really excited about it," Grant said. "We have a lot of prizes and awards. Lady Foot Locker and other companies have given us enough prizes that no one who participates in the competition will go home empty-handed."

Applications for the competition can be obtained at all of the recreation centers and Boys Clubs in Forsyth County. In addition, Foot Locker at Hanes Mall will also have applications available.
