

Polite hopes vast experience will pay off in race

The Chronicle reported last week in a headline and in a story that Jim Bob Campbell was the only African American seeking the sheriff's office in the upcoming election. That was not correct. Sheriff's Department veteran John Polite is also running and he is an African American. Here is a profile on Polite. — The editor

BY COURTNEY GAILLARD
THE CHRONICLE

Sgt. John Polite came to work for the Forsyth County Sheriff's Department in 1975 in police communications, and he never thought he would be running for sheriff 26 years later. But Polite is running and is one of two black Democratic candidates on the sheriff's ballot.

Over two decades, Polite, a graduate of Winston-Salem State University, has worked in numerous divisions of law enforcement, ranging from the civil division, Highway Patrol, school resource officer, jail officer and court security and has earned to advance law enforcement certificates. Now a deputy sheriff in charge of 13 officers, Polite didn't think he would make an extensive career at the Forsyth County Sheriff's Department when he began as one of the first black officers there. A family friend of Polite was instrumental in his being hired in his first job at the department. Polite knew that once he got his foot in the door time would show that he could do the job well.

One would think after all of that time and exposure to various levels of law enforcement, a bid for sheriff would be a natural progression for Polite. He considers it to be simply making the best out of change, which he has gladly welcomed and appreciated.

"I've always had the ambition to run for sheriff. It's something that has been in the back of my mind for sometime, and it's something that you have to concern yourself with and do in a timely manner," said Polite. C.C. McGee, whom Polite is up against in the Democratic primary, also works for the Sheriff's Department.

Deciding whether to run for sheriff, Polite said, "was something I had to pray about, and I gave it great thought and asked God to order my steps in this endeavor. With all that being done, I feel I was given a sign that it was my time to run." Polite said.

Even though Polite is eligible to retire in June of next year, he remains confident that his long-standing reputation in the community as a deputy sheriff and citizen will catapult him to be a strong contender for sheriff. Unafraid of change and aware of what the officers and citizens both need throughout the county, Polite wants to bring about changes that he thinks are long overdue.

"I have the ability, the training, the knowledge and the integrity to do this job, and that's what I am putting forth to the citizens of Forsyth County," said Polite, who was born and raised in Winston-Salem.

If elected sheriff, Polite would like to reorganize the sheriff's staff to fully maximize employees' efforts by assigning more personnel to patrol throughout the county and taking more proactive methods to monitor potential criminal activity in the county. Polite is interested in developing a citizens review board made up of residents around the county to provide feedback on ways to handle criminals. He also would like to provide services and activities for the elderly, who oftentimes go overlooked and under-cared for by the community.

Aware that Forsyth County historically has been a difficult place for blacks to win countywide elections, Polite, who says he's unapologetically black, sees the uphill battle before him.

However, Polite feels residents are far more concerned with his ability to deliver justice than the color of his skin.

Polite regrets that both his mother and aunt are no longer living to see him run for office, because both were so supportive of him early in his career. They encouraged him to take advantage of opportunities whenever they came his way, and he believes he is doing just that.

Head of UNCG's multicultural affairs dies

SPECIAL TO THE CHRONICLE

GREENSBORO — Students, faculty and staff at The University of North Carolina at Greensboro honored a beloved member of the UNCG family during a "Candlelight Remembrance Service" for Pamela Wilson, director of the Office of Multicultural Affairs, who died at Moses Cone Hospital Tuesday. The service was held at 7 p.m. Wednesday at the fountain in front of the University Dining Center.

Wilson

"Our thoughts and prayers are with Pamela's immediate family and for the UNCG community as we share their grief."

Wilson, who was a member of the UNCG family for almost 11 years, was a friend, mentor and role model for countless students. The Office of Multicultural Affairs coordinates several annual events that address and promote diversity, awareness and multiculturalism at UNCG, including the Martin Luther King Jr. Service Award, a Black History Month series and the annual Shades of Color Conference, held recently.

Wilson was responsible for bringing prominent African-American speakers to campus, including Myrtle Evers-Williams, Shirley Chisholm, Joycelyn Elders, Ossie Davis, coach Herman Boone and former boxing champion Rubin "Hurricane" Carter.

Before being named director of multicultural affairs, Wilson worked as an assistant director in the UNCG Office of Academic Advising and Support Services. A graduate of High Point University, Wilson held a master's degree from N.C. A&T State University. She was an adjunct instructor at Guilford Technical Community College and was employed by A&T from 1980-89. She was a native of High Point.

MBA program approved for WSSU

SPECIAL TO THE CHRONICLE

The proposed master's in business administration program of Winston-Salem State University's School of Business and Economics was approved March 6 by the University of North Carolina Board of Governors during a scheduled meeting of the board.

"This program will play a significant role in the university's goal of providing well-trained and highly motivated future business leaders for the region," said Dr. Arthur King, dean of the WSSU School of Business and Economics. "This program will be the high-quality, low-cost option for working professionals to obtain an MBA in the region."

WSSU's School of Business and Economics recently achieved accreditation from the prestigious accrediting agency AACSB International — The Association to Advance Collegiate Schools of Business. King feels the new MBA program will enhance the school's ability to leverage that accreditation.

The curriculum will stress the universal traits of management and their use in various organizations. The curriculum is designed to create an understanding of an organization's business activities and to develop business skills and high levels of competence in major concentration areas.

Candidates for the MBA degree can concentrate in any one of these areas: MBA with a concentration in financial services, MBA with a concentration in health-care management, MBA with a concentration in management information systems.

Candidates also may complete a general MBA by taking electives from several areas. A strong undergraduate education in any academic field is good preparation for graduate study in business. Prior academic work in business is not necessary. Students with undergraduate degrees in the sciences and liberal arts are strongly encouraged to apply. Each candidate must have a bachelor's degree and submit a GMAT score. Sessions will be scheduled to give information to people interested in enrolling in the program. For more information, call (336) 750-2342 or send e-mail to oluokunm@wssu.edu.
