SPECIAL TO THE CHRONICLE

Recently, East Winston Primary School was honored by State Superintendent of Education Phil Kirk for being a school of high growth and one of the most improved K-8 schools in North Carolina. To celebrate the accomplishments, 16 students visited the office of Mayor Allen Joines.

During the visit, several questions pertaining to city government were asked such as, "Who will replace the mayor if something happens to him?" Joines said the mayor tempore, City Council member Vivian Burke, would replace him. Joines asked the students, "What is the recipe to being a school of high growth and one of the most improved schools in the state?" The students replied, "Good administration, good teachers, and good food." During their visit, the students also recited "My Promise," a poem that is recited daily that promotes good behavior and learning. Red Cross is seeking information on non-Christian, non-mainstream faiths

The High Point/Thomasville Chapter of the American Red Cross International Service Committee is seeking information from individuals involved in worshipping/practicing Shintoism, Scientology, Zoroastrianism, Native American Spiritism and other non-Christian, non-mainstream faiths and/or religious practices to aid the Red Cross in compiling an International Services Manual on death and dying, as well as dietary information, concerning individuals involved in those religious, cultural and ethnic groups.

The manual is being compiled by the Red Cross to provide adequate religious and cultural background information about death, dying, funeral customs and related issues to educate emergency workers/volunteers and enable them to interact in the least stressful and most helpful manner possible if an emergency arises with serious injury or illness.

The dietary information will provide information necessary for workers/volunteers to quickly supply appropriate emergency food supplies for members of those religious, cultural and ethnic groups in an emergency to which the Red Cross might respond.

If you are a member of a religion, culture, ethnic group, especially one not normally considered as mainstream, and would like your group included/represented in the Red Cross International Services Manual, call the Red Cross (Jennie Hege) at 885-9121 ext. 224 or High Point Human Relations (James L. Pettiford) at 883-3124.

groups. Combined with the now-familiar summertime ground level ozone program, the fine particle forecasts enable Forsyth county to operate one of the only year-round, multiple pollutant forecast and outreach efforts in the country.

"We are pleased to receive national recognition for our forecasting program," said Lewis Weinstock, air monitoring program manager for

FCEAD

Since developing this program in 2000, FCEAD has received numerous requests from state and local air agencies for additional information. The program has been highlighted during EPA's annual National Air Quality Forecasting Conference, and Weinstock recently assisted with the presentation of an air pollution forecasting training course for the nation's forecasters, held during February in San Antonio, Texas.
