EMPLOYMENT

She dreamed of building skyscrapers... but found her calling working on water and sewer lines.

As the engineer for the Construction & Maintenance division of City/County Utilities, Toneq' McCullough is pretty far removed from the notion that led her to a degree in civil engineering from Clemson University.

"I took a drafting course in high school, and liked it so much that I decided I wanted to build skyscrapers. Of course, when I graduated, I had to find a job, so I took a position as an engineer-in-training with N.C. DOT." That led to a full time job with the state Transportation Department regional office in Winston-Salem, which led to a job in 1998 with the city's Engineering Department working on road, water and sewer projects.

Two years ago she was promoted to her present job, in charge of the 136 men and women in Utilities Construction & Maintenance. "I'm basically a site supervisor, overseeing the crews that maintain the water and sewer lines.... The best thing about the job is we get to see the results of our work immediately. If we get called about a water leak and it's our responsibility, we go out and fix it. Our slogan is, 'If you can brush and flush, we're doing our job right.'

"I think I've found my niche here, working with Utilities. Maybe it's because the people I work with like what they do so much that it's contagious. Because, they really do see the importance of what they do."

It takes an impressive breadth of job skills to keep city government running. Our employees are engineers, fire fighters, recreation leaders, financial clerks and heavy equipment operators.

Have you thought about putting your job skills to work for the city?
