

King of Rap

Darryl "D.M.C." Matthews McDaniels, a founding member of the pioneering rap group Run-DMC., signs the shirt of a young fan on Saturday. McDaniels was among the many notables who played in a celebrity flag football game at Wake Forest University. The event was part of a slate of events staged during the Josh Howard Celebrity Week. The local-born NBA star donated proceeds from the game and other events to his foundation.

Smith at Winston-Salem State University in 1991, singer Emmylou Harris at UNC Greensboro in 1966 and a bearded David Sedaris at Western Carolina University in 1976.

But yearbooks offer more than celebrity photos. The yearbooks also preserve important traditions, such as the selection of queens for classes and majors at many historically black colleges. Genealogists use the yearbooks to identify and learn about ancestors.

The North Carolina Collection at UNC's Wilson Special Collections Library manages the North Carolina Digital Heritage Center. The center works with libraries, museums, historical societies and cultural institutions across the state to publish historical materials online.

The center is currently expanding the North Carolina Yearbooks collection by reaching out to community colleges. Another major program is the effort to digitize old runs of campus and community newspapers from across the state.
