Fighting to remain open

Job of historic visually impaired person in jeopardy

BY TODD LUCK
THE CHRONICLE

IFB Solutions (formerly Industries for the Blind) is currently taking court action to protect its contract to provide eyeglasses to veterans.

IFB Optical has had a contract with Veterans Affairs for 16 years. It currently fills eyeglass prescriptions to 38 VA hospitals and serves more than 240,000 veterans annually. IFB got the contract as an AbilityOne organization that provides employment to people who are blind or visually impaired.

PDS Consultants, a veteran-owned New Jersey company, filed a suit in August over its consideration in the AbilityOne program, asking for an injunction on VA optical contracts. According to IFB, this would essentially shutdown their optical laboratory.

"We're participating in a vigorous defense with the Department of Veterans Affairs, who of course, feels that they are properly awarding contracts," said IFB COO Dan Kelly.

IFB Optical has 88 employees, including 45 who are blind and seven veterans. These employees include Damarrious Bowers, who recently became one of only three visually impaired people in the country to earn American Board of Opticianry (ABO) certification.

Bowers has been an employee at IFB for five years. He's worked in different departments doing many different jobs before joining customer service in IFB Optical. He currently reviews incoming orders to ensure their accuracy using technology to greatly magnify the words on customer paperwork and his screen.

Bowers studied for hours a day for three months for the certification test, which he passed on the first try. He's

Blue backs independent redistricting commission

BY CASH MICHAELS
FOR THE CHRONICLE

Saying that "people need relief from this ... runaway government as soon as possible," state Sen. Dan Blue (D-Wake), the Senate minority leader, says he's in favor of establishing an independent redistricting commission by 2020.

That's so that the partisan advantage that the party in power always seeks in redrawing the voting districts is removed, and as North Carolina begins to have more competitive elections for both the state legislature and Congress.

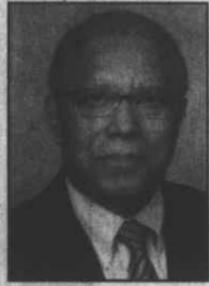

"And it needs to be in such a way that the people representing all of us are elected in a constitutional manner," Blue maintained.

Currently, because Republicans won a majority of seats in the state House and Senate in 2010, they were able to draw the redistricting maps for the legislature and Congress, which were suppose to govern elections for the balance of the decade until 2020.

However, earlier this year, the U.S. Fourth Circuit Court of Appeals ruled the 2011 redistricting maps were unconstitutional because Republicans "staked and packed" African-Americans into just a few voting districts, denying them their right to influence elections in other districts. This is otherwise known as racial gerrymandering.

"You have to believe that somewhere [the Republican legislative leadership] got in their mind that anything is fair as long as it keeps them in power," Blue said. Earlier this week, Blue held a press conference at the start of the special session for disaster relief, warning the GOP not to even consider adding two more seats to the NC Supreme Court just to offset the election victory of Democrat Justice-elect Mike Morgan. This action had been heavily rumored.

The federal appeals court allowed the gerrymandered legislative maps to be used for the 2016 general elections, but just recently ordered that state lawmakers, when they return for the long session in January, must redraw the voting districts constitutionally by March 2017, and then once they're approved by the appellate court, hold special election primaries either at the end of August 2017, or the beginning of September, and then special legislative elections in November 2017.
