BOUQUET OF MELODY. THE PRESS AND THE FLOW.

We envy not the princely man, In city or in town, Who wades 'neath pumpkin vines Turn up the hill or down. We care not for his gold, Nor yet his diamonds, Nor yet his horse and carriage, Nor yet his wealth's proud train.

The lawyer lives on princely fees, He never lacks a goodly sum, His atmosphere is strife, A merchant's banker yardstick o'er, His gizzard at his side, His hand on the scales, His foot on the tiller.

AN INTERNATIONAL EPISODE. "Yes, I liked you better, I must confess, And a week ago I might have been fun, But that is the way of the world, you know, For I am only a young man now."

There was silence while on the Alpine height, They could hear the sound of a mountain stream, His hand on the tiller, His foot on the tiller, His hand on the tiller, His foot on the tiller.

LADY BY A. M. MUNSTER. Laid by in my silent chamber, I hear the wind sighing, And I know my soul is in mine ear, Still waiting for me.

FAIRLY CAUGHT. My employment is that of a carrier in the city, and I have been called upon to deliver a package to a certain address.

Among those who were in the habit of frequenting the aforesaid saloon, was a man of singular habits, and of an odd temper. His name was Mr. X.

It was a man of ill-temper and loose habits, and for some time had borne a dubious character. When people were asked why he was respected, they could not give a satisfactory reply.

preceding night. Much valuable property had been taken. This robbery had been effected in such a way as to lead to the belief that a gang of practiced thieves had done it.

I pass over the next few days, as they brought forth no remarkable incident. The gardener had stuck to his contract with the landlord, and I had been enabled to get on with my work.

After supper one night I took the opportunity to visit the habitation of the public house, and as we went along I asked me to take particular notice of the dog and the lamb.

When we got to the house the old man came to the door, and he was flushed. Being asked if he would allow the gardener to see over his collection of preserved animals, he at first seemed perplexed.

Next night came, and the gardener set off on his errand, and I was impatient for his return. But when he came, he seemed unwilling to relate the result of his adventure, simply saying, "I'm in no humor for talk to-night; I'll relate it to you some other time."

My friend had gone on with his gardening. His potatoes and onions, his turnips and carrots had been got in, and it was clear that if he had not two or three should prove fine he would finish the job on Saturday night.

On Friday night he came to me in the kitchen, in a corner in which I was reading, and asked me to go for a walk with him. I got up and went.

The night was fine but dark. We walked in the direction of the museum. He asked me if I could keep a secret for a day or two. Replying in the affirmative, he said he had a strong suspicion that the old naturalist or his son was not being quite so straightforward as he appeared.

We had not walked far before we met the naturalist's son, apparently by appointment; for my companion told him that I was waiting for him, and that, therefore, he would be at his father's house next day, and make a purchase. We parted and came home.

At about midnight the two watchmen came out, and in less than an hour he came back, bearing a tolerable sized parcel. Giving me a signal as he passed, he joined him in the back yard. He said that he had a strong suspicion that the old naturalist or his son was not being quite so straightforward as he appeared.

I was about to witness a deaconess I had not looked for. Up the road were a couple of policemen. My old companion was the chief being a Sergeant of Police. He led the way to the museum, and was the first to enter.

"Good morning, my old friend," he said in a conciliatory tone, "I have come to see you, and to say a few more parcels of your cheap provisions."

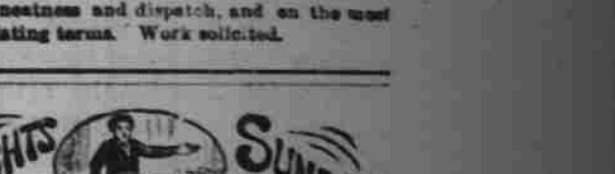

I saw that the old gardener was detected in the speaker, and that the game was up. The old man was utterly helpless, and almost beside himself. Sinking into his chair, he cried out: "I am not the thief; the thieves are there," pointing to the door and meaning, I could see, his son and confederates, though they were not present.

We went into the museum. The first thing the old gardener—as I shall still call him—was to take hold of "Bruce" while he desired one of his comrades to lay hold of "Wonder." On moving, then a noise of loose metal was heard. A moment's examination sufficed to reveal the secret. In the side of each animal, in the soft part, an orifice had been made by cutting the skin in such a way as to enable the operator to replace it with a little card.

Nearly all the proceeds of the two robberies of the jeweler were recovered, one watch and a few guarts only being absent. And some of the property of the gardener was also recovered. Most of it had been used or sold. I need hardly say that the parcels sold to the gardener were a part of it, and had he now spoken and the refinement which marked his manner. Still I could make nothing of it.

It is well to get into dreadnought at times, and I had then added: "Did you say that the old man keeps a museum? Have you seen it? Do you think I could get a look at it?" The questions were put one after the other in quick succession, as though he were eager and anxious about something. I said "yes" to each, but I was surprised to find that in which he had now spoken and the refinement which marked his manner. Still I could make nothing of it.

PATIENCE measures the character; it perfects it. WHAT IN LIFE is more beautiful than happy human facts?

KEEP your own counsel upon all occasions. If you can not and do not, who else can you expect to do so for you?

It is one thing to possess the fortress in peace, and another to hold it in time of battle and storm of cannon and burst of shell and clank of bayonets.

LOVE like a beautiful flame, is a glowing gem which carries a spark of fire in its bosom; but true friendship, like a diamond, radiates steadily from its transparent heart.

BE not unmindful of the feelings and rights of others. Ill-spoken words often cause the deepest wounds and many times are the source of the direst trouble.

TO succeed in life demands at our hands a complete obedience to the rule confirming our aims and desires to only such attainments as are also in our power. We can then advance slowly but surely.

THE noblest virtue is always that one obtained over one's self. It is a difficult task, indeed, to say "no" emphatically to all the longings of our own self and nature, but an easy one to discriminate between the right and the wrong.

Some of the most beneficial results are those emanating from casual thoughts only. When the mind is resting the most difficult problems are frequently solved.

LOVE is a great power, and it is a great blessing to have it in our hearts. It is a power that can do more than any other power.

TO forgive our enemies is a charming way of revenge, and a short-cut to a conquest, overcoming without a blow, laying out our enemies at our feet under sorrow, shame, and repentance.

THE philosopher Mullen has said: "Our progress would be slow indeed were we to attempt advancement by regarding ourselves as the model to follow." We should seek to embody in our efforts art, self-improvement—the commendable qualities and charitable actions of others.

TO be a man of letters is a great advantage, and it is a great blessing to have it in our hearts. It is a power that can do more than any other power.
