LUCINA CORDIAL

LE CORDIAL DE LUCINE,

CU L'ELIXIR DE L'AMOUR. Most important to the American Public.

HE United States' Proprietor of the celebrated " Lucina Cordial," or "Elixir of Love," begs to tay before the community the fol lowing certificate which he has received from the inventor, the illustrious Dr. Magnin, of Parisi

"This is to certify, that I have disposed of the receipt for making the Lusina Cordial or Elixir No paper discentinued until all arrearages are of Love, and also the right to sell it throughout the United States of North America, to JOHN WINTERS HOLDERWELL, M. D. My reason for so doing, is, that the demands on me for the above Cordial, of which I am the inventor, are so numerous that I am unable to supply all the orders from France and Italy alone; and have therefore disposed of the privileges vouchsafed in this and other certificates of a like nature, in order to generalize the benefits of my discovery throughout the world.

Given under my hand at Paris, on this nine teenth day of January, in the year of our Lord eighteen hundred and thirty eight.

The United States agent for the Lucina Cordial returns his grateful acknowledgements for the flattering patronage which he has already received, and also for the many testimonials which have been sent him, touching the almost miraculous efficacy of his mestimable medicine, The well founded reputation of the Lucina Cordial warrants the agent in withdrawing his long advertisements; but for the benefit of those per sons who may yet be unaware of its nature, he would explicitly state, that it is Dr. Magnin celebrated discovery, which has created such a sensation in France-that it speedily restores the ual cure for the "fluor albus;" and above all, that it is the only medicine ever discovered for the removal of impotency in males, and barrenness in females. Owing to its vastly invigorating qualities, it is also highly used in gleet, obstructed, difficult or painful menstruation, incontinence of the urine, or involuntary discharge thereof, chronic eruptions of the skin, dropsical affections of the aged, &c.

Dr. Casper, of Berlin, in his valuable work, en- ber of births increase so does the number of deaths titled 'Der wahrschenliche Labendaur des Men- at the same time. schen, &c., 1835, after having examined the current opinions as to the average duration of human life, and as to the most satisfactory method of ascertaining such a result, announces his own doctrine in the following proposition: The proportion read the Bible with as much attention as of births to the population in any place expresses it was read by the Great Bard. Some of almost exactly the medium of average duration of his best thoughts are copied from the Sa-

This, if true, is indeed a proposition of great his heart, importance in political economy. To prove that the mortality is in a direct ratio with the fecundity of any population, and consequently that governments, seeing that the force of States consists not so much on the mere number, as on the strength, fecundity, and longavity of their inhabitants, ought not to favor or encourage | am black -- because the sun has looked an over abundant population, the author has collected together a vast number of facts, and for this purpose has drann up tables of the mortality, not only in Prussia, but also in Britain, France and

The influence of poverty and destitution in shortening the medium duration of life is well known. Dr. Casper gives some tables of mortality which proves the sad contrast in this respect between the poor and the affluent. From these it would seem that the medium age of the nobility in Germany may be stated at about 50 years, whereas that of Madeira, Sweet Malaga, WINES, casks the paupers is as low as 32 years. Dr. Casper shows, by a vast number of documents that "the mortality in any population is always in exact ratio to its fecundity," or in other words, "the more prolific the people are, the greater, usually, is the mortality among them." 2. The female sex enjoys, at every period of life except at puberty, at which epoch the mortality is rather greater among young females, a greater longevity than the male sex. 3. Pregnancy and labor occasions, indeed a considerable loss of life: but this loss disappears, or is lost in the general mass. 4. The so called climacteric periods of life do not seem to have any influence on the longevity of either sex. 5. The medium of duration of life, at the present time, is in Russia about 21 years, in Prussia 39, in Switzerland 34, in France 36, in Belgium

7. In reference to the influence of professions or occupation on life, it seems that ecclesiastics are on the whole, the longest, and medical men the shortest livers; military men are nearly between the two extremes, but yet, proportionally. they more frequently than others, reach very advanced years.

8. The mortality is very generally greater in manufacturing than in agricultural districts. 9. Marriage is decidedly favorable to longevity.

10. The mortality among the poor is always greater than among the wealthier classes. 11. The mortality in a population appears to be always proportionate to its fecundity-as the num-
