Killed in Jumping From an Engine.

HANNIBAL, Mo, Oct 8.—Fred D. Hill, aged 14, in attempting to jump from an engine on the Missouri, Kansas and Texas Railroad fell beneath the wheels and was instantly killed.

There is a colored woman in our city about two and a half feet high, weighing at least two hundred pounds—down weight. . . . For the first time in several years the Jurors last week had to go home without receiving pay for their labors. . . . We learn that at a meeting of the physicians of Wayne county on last Tuesday it was agreed to form a county Medical Society. This is a move in the right direction. If they will organize such a society and have monthly or quarterly meetings at which they could discuss medical matters and have a free interchange of views with an occasional essay from some member, it would undoubtedly benefit them. . . . Five years ago, C. F. R. Kornegay, County Treasurer, turned over to his successor, (if our memory serves us right) about $6,000 in cash and the county out of debt. To-day the county is in debt how much? Probably six or seven thousand dollars, and county orders are being sold on the streets at a discount of from ten to fifteen per cent.—Goldsboro Bulletin.

The Reporter of the Knights of Honor of the Salisbury Lodge, No. 775, has the $2,000 benefit, due the family of Capt. T. W. Lowery, deceased, and will pay it over as soon as a Guardian shall have been appointed for the children.—Salisbury Examiner.

Any one who watches carefully the drift of opinion and events among the negro leaders, cannot well fail to discern an increasing purpose on their part to force social equality. We think the tendency of Fred. Douglass's speech at Louisville is in that direction.—Wilmington Star.

At Monmouth, Ills., Mrs. J. W. Bailey cut her daughter's throat and then her own. She is supposed to have been crazy. In the mother's pocket the following note was found:

"I believe it will be better with my child after death. It is best to sacrifice my life for her. Do not allow my dear husband or children to see me after death. Do not mourn for me."

The family consisted of three sons and one other daughter.
