ADDRESS

Lelivered before Followship Lodge, No. 81, OF FREE AND ACCEPTED MASONS,

At Smithfield, June 24, 1849,

BY HENRY W. MILLER.

MY FRIENDS AND BRETHREN:

I sppear before you in obedience to a call which I could not well disregard. It would, however, have been gratifying to my feelings, and certainly more conducive to the pleasure and instruction which the Cereomies of this interesting occasion are so well calculated to impart, had some one been selected whose experience and learning render him better qualified

There is nothing which more strikingly illustrates the character of the ago and country in which we live, than the general and enthusiastic efforts which are in progress to improve the condition and elevate the moral and intellectual character of all classes of men.

To advance such objects, Societies and Associations are constantly springing into existence, which, professing to have in view some beneficial and benevolent cud, are able to command the united energies of vast bodies of men, whose zeal, in most instances, affords some test of the sincerity of their convictions, and the purity of their motives.

That some of these Associations are not destined for good, but rather tend to evil, either from the principles by which they are governed, or the means which are adopted to effectuate their purposes, will hardly admit of But there is a consolation in the assurance, that, as those which are erected upon a files basis, will, in the nature of things, work out their own downfall, so those which are founded upon the Bock of Truth, need not fear the violence of denunciation or the rashness of opposition, but look forward, with a steady eye, and resolute purpose, through all the mists of error which may envelope them, to the bright, clear light which will burst

The Hand which directs this vast machinery of moral and intellectual effort, is Divine; and as it will assuredly uphold and prosper those Institu-tions which are of good report, and whose fruits are full of sweetness and healing to the Nations, so too is that Hund sufficiently powerful to elicit good out of evil, and to turn, with skill and promptness, all the devices of men, however imposing they may have been rendered by the sanction of human athority, to the consummation of its own glory, and the strengthening of its

We are told in a beautiful Apologue, that an Eastern Philosopher, who was once asked what inscription he would furnish as most appropriate to all the works of man, replied, "I would write, upon each and all of them, the words—This too shall pass away!"

Could this response have been given with a conviction of its truth to many, who, in the haughtiness of their pride, imagined that the works of their hands and the monuments of their greatness were to be immortal, how would that pridelinave been humbled, or how readily would the indiscreet Sootisayer have met the fate of him who dared to remind the Ancient Potentate, in the

The power, that he and his kingdom were mortal!

Yes—In reviewing the history of past ages, we find that Dynasties were overturned; Empires which had stood for ages the shock of Revolutions, suddenly overwhelmned; systems of intellectual wisdom, which had long been the dealy overwhelmned; systems of intellectual wisdom, which had long been the admiration and delight of the enquiring and the curious, refuted or discarded: the prond Empire of Rome which, for twelve hundred years, led Nations captive at her will, and carried her conquering Eagles in triumph to the atmost boundaries of the known World:—the Kingdom of Charlemagne, which grasped at the same unbounded dominion:—the gorgeous paporama of Military Conquest, which was spread out before the astonished gaze of the Nineteenth Century, by the fiery Genius of Napoleon:—the proudest Theories Nineteenth Century, by the fiery Genius of Napoleon:—the proudest Theories of Philosophy, by which the magic fame of Plato, Aristotle and others, led captive the minds of their votaries—all—all, had written upon them the melancholy scutence of the Eastern Philosopher,-" This, too, shall

- " So fails, so languishes, grows dim and dies,
- " All that this world is proud of. From their spheres, "The Stars of Human Glory are cast down;
- " Princes and Emperors, and the Crowns and Palms "Of all the mighty, withered and consumed!"

There is however a part which remains - a part which is immortal Governments may perish, but their examples live. Associations may die, but their principles remains. The most intricate or sublime systems of intellectual or moral reasoning may be dissipated, but their im ressions for good or evil, for truth or error, exist,—long,—long—after the ames of those who promulged or erected them, have passed away, and been forgotten forever!

However interesting it might be, it would scarcely be considered appropriate, even had I the time and information at command, to enter into a minute history of the Origin and Progress of Free Masonry. We know that the Craft consisted, in its infancy, principally of Operative Masons, whose primary abject was the improvement of Architecture, by the application of the Rules and Principles of the Science of Geometry. From its Operative, its Science of Geometry. to its Speculative and Moral character, the transition was easy and natural.

The first we learn of the establishment of regular Lodges, was at the eriod of the erection of the GREAT TEMPLE by that wise and powerful Ruler. King Solomon. Under the influence of the influence friendship which was formed by the mystic tie of Masonry, between him and Hinas, King of Tyre, the Order flourished to an astonishing degree, and spread throughout the aur-rounding parts of that Eastern Country.

Its introduction into Europe is attributable to Nixus, as early as the year of the World 2030, from which time its success varied until the year of our Savieur, 952, when the Grand Lodge of York was finned, and received the countemance and support of King Athelstane, of which Lodge his brother,

From the Grand Communication which assembled at York, about that period, we derive our book of Committutions upon which rests the Order of Ancient York Masons.

It was the founding of that Ledge which gave an impulse to Masonry that was full throughout the civilized world. Its advocates and disciples spread over Europe—the western part of Asia, and the gathern parts of Africa. Early after the settlement of this country by the Europeans, it was introduced with the improvements it had undergone, and soon gained a perpuanent feethold, from which it has advanced, with a firm and steady step to present period. There is no section of the Union in which its salutary mence is not felt, either through the direct operation of a regular Ledge. or the silent but sure effect of its principles through the exertions of its indi

If an iquity of existence can add to the claim which an Institution may have to public respect and equisideration, then indeed, does the Order of Free and accepted Magons, present credentials which cannot be disregarded. For pearly three thousand years has it existed, retaining its distinguished features and keeping steadily in view the great objects of its foundation amidst all the changes which have marked the progress of events. In whatever clime and under whatever Government it has been planted, there its principles of benevolence and charity have taken deep root, and in due season produced the richest fruits.

plea of benevolence and charity have taken deep root, and in due season produced the richest fruits.

Nor has it lacked at any period of its existence, the countenance and general successions are the purest hearts and the brightest intellects. Under the protecting and harmonizing influence of its principles, the crowned head and the humble person have act together. Hen of conflicting political and religious persons and protecting steadily in view and yielding obsdience to the precepts of the Order, have met in charity and good will. The Shatesman and Philosopher—the Prot and Divige—men of all callings, and every constituting pursuit, have regted from their labors, under the expanded branches of this tree, which has so long withstood and breasted the fary of the storms which have heat against its venerable trunk.

Amongst that galaxy of bright names in the history of our own country, which have being willing and devoted testimony to its character and objects, must be the captions caveller, and bigetted reviler case their emlattered ravings, for there is recorded high up, on the long sorall of its vota-the reverence and practice of political virtue—the establishment of good Government, and the enjoyment of well regulated freedom!

It is not however upon its antiquity alone, nor upon the sanction of the illustrious names which adorn its annals, that Masonry rests its claim to the approval and support of all good men. It is willing to stand or fall by the principles which have ever governed it, and the objects which are presented for its accomplishment. In hours of its severest trials it has depended upon the intrinsic ments of its cause for ancess. When assailed with all the litterness of ignorance and history—when persecution kept its fires lighted the intrinsic morats of its cause for auccess. When assailed with all the bitterness of ignorance and bigotry—when persecution kept its fires lighted up, in every valley and upon every hill, the hellish glare of whose flames was but a type—a miniature of the hearts of those who kindled them, and longed for fresh victims for the devouring element of their cruelty; tr never for one moment lost sight of its benevolent purposes—ever exercising the virtue of forbearance—bearing in mind that "a soft word turneth away anger," and confident that its success depended not upon violence or denunciation—not here alterestics or averticement, but more requirements and persecution of the upon altercation or excitement-not upon cruelty and persecution, but on the strong assurance which has accompanied the Order in every trying vicissitude through which it has passed, that as light should break in upon the minds of men, its virtues would shine forth in all the mildness and beauty of their

It is not however in the full gaze of the public eye that Masonry spreads out its trophies. It crects no monuments of brass or marble to impress its actions upon the minds of the astonished multitude. It is not amongst the gay and glittering throngs which surround the thrones of Princes, or press with eager curiosity around those who bear upon their persons the insignaof civil or military renown—but in the privacy of the domestic circle, that Masonry would apply for a just consideration of its claims to honor and

Nor would it hesitate to forego any and all the charms which the career of wealth and power can bring, to the gratification of the most unbounded ambition, to walk an humble handmaid of Charity, as she scatters around her blessings, coming to the hearts of the suffering and distressed, like the manna which fell from Heaven, to the starving Israelites of old!

To relieve the distressed—feed the hungered—clothe the naked—bind up the broken-hearted—raise the fallen—pour light into the dead and darkened intellect—call out and add vigor and efficacy to all the nebler impulses of the heart-what higher-what more heavenly objects could elicit the admiration command the energies of man?

Its mission, like that of the good man, the anniversary of whose birth we have met to commemorate, is but "to prepare the way"—to prepare the way for those still sublimer virtues, which illustrated the character of Him, whose life here was one of goodness, love, purity and suffi-ring—who died "the just for the unjust"—and who, whilst in all the agonies of the intensest pain and anguish, uttered that heavenly inspired invocation, " Father, forgive-they know not what they do!"

Whilst at the same time that it remains one of the professed principles of the Order to confine its acts of benevolence within no particular limits, but to extend the hand of Charity to all mankind, and brotherly love, to all Masons or their families, who may need it, no matter in what clime such may be found, yet melancholy and mortifying indeed would it be, were they to neglect those objects of their care and aid, which are around and about them, and which come under their immediate view.

Brethren, it is not necessary that you should go far hence to find an object worthy the active exertions of every Mason. I should be doing injustice to the Order, and violence to every generous impulse, were I to pass it over

For years past, the attention of Masons in other States and Counties. has been earnestly directed to the great subject of Education. Under the fostering care of the Order, Seminaries of Learning have sprung up and been nurtured in many sections of our country, producing results, the influence of which will be felt throughout succeeding generations.

The appeal which has been made to the Order in our own State, cannot be disregarded, without placing at our doors a heavy responsibility. The Grand Lodge of the State, in 1847, by a series of Resolutions, brought the subject of establishing Seminaries for the education of children of living. and the orphans of deceased Masons, before the subordinate Lodges. matter was discussed and urged with much zeal and ability at the last meeting of the Grand Lodge. The Grand Master in an eloquent address which should call forth a hearty response from all the Lodges, has pressed this aubject upon us with an earnestness and ability which is worthy of the highest success. sesed to raise a fund sufficient to found and sup tion of Learning, at which the children of brother Masons who are in needy circumstances, may receive the advantages of a liberal education, under the supervision of the Grand Lodge. I will not stop here to inquire into the practicability of the plan. If two thousand regular Masons, in connexion with, and aided by, the large number of retired Masons in the State, sarink back in despair from the accomplishment of such a work, then indeed is the spirit which actuated the Fraternity in days past, gone—gone from amongst us! But the feasibility of the plan has been demonstrated beyond cavil beyond the captious objections even of the most nilserly parsimony. Even should none of us witness, in our day and generation, such a work brought should nope of us witness, in our day and generation, such a work trought to perfection, we can at least make a beginning. We do not indulge the vain hope to see such a project spring into full perfection, like the fabled Goldess whom the Ancients represent as looping ready armed from the brain of Jove. To some it may be granted to lay the foundation—to others may be the labor of building the superstructure, and to those who shall come after them, may be left the gratification of witnessing the completion of the Editice. But self the gratucation of withcesting the competion of the Lantee. But still we can do something. We can lay the corner stone with assurances that the work will go up and go on. We may not see and enjoy all of its blessings, but some portion may fall to our lot. We may not behold the brightest effulgence of the new-risen planet, but some few of its rays may penetrate the gloom which surrounds us. And is it not an object worthy of all our energies? Does it not present the strongest claims to our support? Can we be true to the great and benevolent precepts of the Order, and with-hold our aid, however small from such a work—marked as this is by every thing which should elicit the best hopes, and exercions of the generous and

I confess my heart is full when I reflect upon the glorious results which must necessarily follow the erection of such an Institution. Look around you my friends, at the condition, mental used more, of many children whose fathers were once ornaments to the Order. Amongst them, are many who were deprived of the comforts of life, and passed under the iron yoke of poverty, by the same blow which severed them from parental care and assistance. Whilst poverty and suffering are thus pressing them to the easth, the wants of the body, you stand ready to relieve. Your purse is open—your hearts are open, to satisfy their hunger and clothe their nakedness. But oh! how infinitely more important to their present and eternal happiness, is the satisfaction of those other cravings which przy upon the mind, and devour the immortal aspirations of the soul! Mouthatter month passes like a dark waye, into the Ocean of the past—year after year with icy fingers creeps upon them, but no hand is raised to lift from their intellects the thick and opon them, but no hand is raised to lift from their intellects the fines and chilling cloud of ignorance! The light of intelligence is around and about them—it beams forth from every countenance, and warms every heart, but no ray is allowed to penetrate their souls!—none of its genial influence warms into life and activity their down-stricken minds! Amongst them may be those who under proper culture, would leave the impress of their minds upon the age in which they live, transmitting to posterity a fame, which would not only add to the character of the Order, but give new lastre to pur National renowed. And yet we hearingto.

would not only add to the character of the Order, but give new lustre to pur National renown! And yet we healtate!

The Fraternity, in every part of the Civilized World, are awakening to the great importance of this subject. They see and feul that in the race of Mental and Moral Improvement, which is now going on, and which is giving to everything a new and more active form and character, that for this Order to stand by, in dull and listless inactivity, would be to falsify its principles, and to assume a position which, even in the darkness of the Middle Ages, it would have accorned to hold; for even them, were the Lodges of Europe the repositories of Learning and of the Holy Scriptures, and from them went forth many a beam of light which burst through the thick gloom that hung over the continent, and carried joy and mental freedom to thousands!

What a neble example did the Masons of Germany, Denmark and Sweden, more than half a century ago, present for our imitation! Schools and Seminaries of Learning were erected in many sections of those countries, for the education of the children of Masons, who, by their poverty, had been detarred this advantage!

arred this advantage | In an Institution of this kind, established at Brunswick, the Students

In 1771, a like Institution was established at Cassel, and continues to this day to spread its blessings throughout the surrounding country.

The united Ledges of Dresden, Leipsic, and Garlitz erected, in 1773, at Frederickstadt, a Seminary of Learning, which has been richly endowed, and greatly encouraged. In a few years after it went into operation, it had educated and sent forth eleven hundred children, many of whom subsequently took their places amongst the most distinguished Scholars and States the Age and Country in which they lived; and even now, some of them are known to the civilized world as being in the front ranks of the most illustrious men of Europe.

The same benevolent and enlightened spirit has governed the Fraternity in other parts of the Fastern Continent. And should we, who believe that so much, both of individual and National happiness and prosperity depend upon the enlightenment of the public mind, be found in the rear of our brettern whose lots have been cast under the Monarchies and Despotisms of Europe 7 Who can calculate the value of such an Institution to the rising generation-aye, to generations yet unborn? None can estimate what men tal richness it may gather up for our State and Country!

Brethren, it is for you to say whether such sweetness is longer to be wasted on the desert air—whether such gems, such intellectual riches are to remain obscures in the dark, and now impenetrable, caves of ignorance!

With you I leave this cherished object of the Order, confidently assured that the appeal which is made by so many of the needy and uneducated Offspring of your brethren for light—that light which illumines the soul—that light which points the way to Heaven—that light which teaches "'tis not all of life to live," but that there lies beyond this transitory existence a dread reality for eternal weal or wee, will not be made in vain; but that here will be found, in every section of our State, men who, with wise, bene volent, and resolute hearts, will push forward this great work to a glorious

Brethren, whilst remembering our sacred obligations to each other as Masons, let us not, I beseech you, forget our duties and responsibilities as men and patriots. We live in an age marked by stirring incidents. The human intellect scens more than ever on the wing for new discoveries, new experiments—the human passions ever eager for new gratifications. In this great drama of life—on this excited and varied stage of action—the humblest great trains of the on the excited and varies stage of action—the numbers amongst you have a part to perform, either for good or ill. The civilized world has but recently been called to contemplate a succession of Revolutions which in many respects have no parallel in history. The events of the last twelve months have overturned threnes and revolutionized leng established governments. The whole of Europe has been writhing under the throes of the mightiest policical Revolutions. The sceptre of Monarchy has been shivered in the grasp of ancient Dynasties. It is proclaimed that the spirit of civil freedom has been aroused to action—that her voice is heard in deep and resolute tones amidst the mountains of Hungary and on the sunny plains of classic Italy—that the long smouldering asies of down-trodden and dis-membered Poland, are about to be rekindled—and that the once Green Isle of the Ocean may yet be able to prove that she has not listened in vain to the Heaven inspired Eloquence of her Grattan and her Curran. What are to be he effects on the civilized world of that volcano which is threatening to ourst over Europe-what horrors the eruption is to produce-what fields are to be laid waste, and depopulated by the bot lava which will burst from its fiery crater-what villages, and towns, and cities, and temples, are to be overturned and buried beneath this molten mixture of human passions, no one can foresee—none can venture to foretell. Doubt and darkness hang over the future. The signations and philosophic mind of Edmund Burks enabled him to declare, with truth, when speaking of the Government which was reared upon the ruins of the first French Revolution—"Before its final sattlement, it may be obliged to pass through great varieties of untried being; and in all its transmigrations to be purified by tire and blood." If the scenes which have recently been exhibited in Europe, a recurrence of which is still apprehended with awful terror and alarm, be, as is claimed for them, but evidences of the rousing up, the full awakening to its strength, of the long pent spirit of human freedom and national regeneration, we can but bid it triumph; but let us not forget to ask for it—to demand, as necessary for its permanent success, moderation and wisdom—the safe and holy guidance of Virtue and Religion! Thank Heaven! we have no such political tyranny to encounter—no such religious intolerance against which to struggle. The civil and religious privileges which we enjoy were won by the indomitable valor, and have been transmitted down, by the far seeing wisdom and prudence, of those illustrious men whose fame has become the common property ment throughout the world! And though so much has been done by those who have gone before us, still the cup of our national and individual responsibility is full, and it will not be permitted to pass from us. Of its ingredients we must drink, at every hazard, our full share. The eyes of all Nations and we must drink, at every hazard, our full share. The eyes of all Nations and People are turned, with the pand absorbing anxiety, to our Confederacy—to our system of Civil a Religious Freedom. The enemies of Free Institutions watch its progress with dread—their friends with delighted hope and joyous confidence;—and it is because they long for its perpetuity and success, that they entreat us to observe with seared devotion the warning of Washington "not to interweave our destiny with that of other nations—not to entangle our peace and prosperity in the toils of European ambition, rivalship, interest, humor or caprice." It is only by a frequent recurrence to the wise and conservative counsels of this great man and his illustrious comparers, that we can expect to protect from the machiis illustrious compects, that we can expect to protect from the machinations of secret or open enemics at home or abroad, the invaluable blessings we enjoy. They taught us by their example that moderation is not always the virtue of cowards, nor compromise the prudence of traitors. It is true, that we have not the same course of duty to run—the same sufferings and privations to encounter-the same buttles to fight-the same troubled ser of political dangers to explore: But we have the road of our duties and responsibilities marked out before us broad and plain-thrugh beset with difficulties and ardnous of approach. We can be loyal and true to the Constipution and Laws of our Country. We can rebuke all mean, sectional jeal against another-which would arouse in hostile conflict brother against ther-father against son, and son against father-drenching one con brother—father against son, and son against father—drenching one common soil with the blood of common kindred and friends. We can place our stamp of desapprobation upon that wild and subjided fanaticism which would kindle the fires of discord throughout our glorious confederacy—which would root up the deep foundations of our National prosperity and renown. We can assist in opening the eyes of our countrymen to the mischierous intentions of wicked and designing nien. We can aid in pointing out to the ignorant the path to intelligence and virtue—"Sic itur ga assist!" We can instill into the hearts of our children a high and unconquerable devotion to the Union. We can invoke with humble confidence the blessings of the bolds as in the hollow of His hand the destinics of nations; and who led our fathers, with the same merciful care and protection that he three around our fathers, with the same merciful care and protection that he threw around inc isruelites of old, through all the dangers and fiery trials of the Revolution!

Let us do this, and then indeed shall we feel that we had accomplished something as men—as patriots—as Masons—as Christians, to discharge the heavy debt of gratitude which we owe to the great and good who have long since run their career of usefulness and honor, and to transmit to posterily the civil and religious blessings, which they labored even unto death to establish, and which have proved to be the best birth-right and noblest inheri-tablish, and which have proved to be the best birth-right and coblest inheritance of man.

To the Fair Anditors, who have honored us with their presence on this occasion, what can I say half equal to that which they righly merit? Had I language adequate to the sentiments of respect and reverence which should ever be inspired by their beaming and lovely countenances, I might deel with pleasure on the influence which they always exert in calightened society, over the harsher sex. I might appeal to those thrilling emotions which must ever arise in the breast even of the most callous, at the mention of those familiar but magic words—Mother—Sister—Wife! I might dwell with delight on the earliest dawnings of those young affections of the heart, which under proper parental culture, expand into the amplest and subliment sentiments of benevolence and patriotism. I might follow the hopes of the mother as with the eye of Christian faith and piety she reared up to starner manhood, those tender virtues, which in youth, are but the foreshadowings of all the brighter and purer realities of a well spunt life. Had I the power of linguage, I might portray those charming virtues of the heart which have made the sex, in all ages, the pioneers in every cause, which had in view the amelioration of man! I might picture to you the self-denial, the fortitude, the suff-ring, the gentlement, the unceasing charity, exhibited by them in the midst of sickness, sorpow, and distress—

" Erom dawn To midnight, keeping angelic watch beside The cibing spirit, lighting its way to Hoaven!"

But I forbear, under the confident belief, that in this, us in every other good cause, we shall have the approving smiles of those, who, as they are the first to eschew evil, should be the last to desert good: And let them ever remember, that, inasmuch as one claiming to belong to the Order of Free and Accepted Masons, forgets or neglects the sacred duties of domestic lifedashing to the earth all the holy treasures of ffinal love—and filling with poison the cup of connubial happiness—in so much has be departed from the high and ennobling precepts of the Order!

BRETHERY! I have thus, in my feeble way, performed the task which your partiality allotted me. Would that I had possessed the ability to do ustice to those principles of our Order, the beauty and power of which are this day being illustrated throughout our own country, and in every part of the Civilized World. From all those who desire to see the precepts of KINDNESS substituted for the influence of FORCE, in the government and con-Kinoness substituted for the influence of Force, in the government and control of the minds and hearts of men, the Institution of Free Masonry must ever receive the highest commendation, and the richest reward that Earth can bestow! Under such hopes, its disciples can "go forth to meet the shadowy future without fear, and with manly hearts." And may the Great Ruler above so chasten your minds and govern your actions, that you may be prepared for an entrance into the Temple "not made with hands, eternal in the Heavens!"

THE STATE OF DESERET. The Richmond Whig says—Our reader are not probably aware that the Mormons, who have settled on the Great Salt Lake, have already become sufficiently numerous to claim the privilege oftentering the Union as a Sover-eign State. Such, however is the fact, as will be seen by the following passage which we give on the authority of the St. Louis Republican. The editors of that paper have seen certified copies of the constitution, and give the tors of that paper have seen certified copies of the constitution, and give the subjoined account of it, of the causes which led to its adoption, and of the proceedings of the Legislature under it.

The new State is quaintly styled the State or Desener which implies, according to the Mormon History and interpretation, "The Honey Bee," and is significant of Industry and the kindred virtues. It is scarcely necessary to say to our readers that the population of this new State is composed altogether of persons professing the Mormon faith, of whom the number is rapidly increasing every year, that being the State to which all their contents. easing every year, that being the State to which all their emigration is nding. In these proceedings, as in everything else, the peculiarities of this cople are preserved, though we cannot see that this will offer any good har their application for admission into the Union.

In one respect, at least, the Convention which forged the constitution for e new State has set a good example. They were employed only one week in action upon it, and we do not see but what it is as good a one as some of our States have been able to form after years of agitation, and months of de-

The powers of the government are divided into three departments—execu-ive, legislative and judicial. The article in relation to the legislative department is not essentially different from the constitutions of the several States. Members are required to be free white male citizens of the United States, and to take an oath to support e constitution thereof. The first Senate is to consist of 17 members, and the House of 35 members.

In the Executive Department provision is made for the election of Governor Lieutenant Governor, Secretary of State, Auditor of public Accounts, and Treasurer. The judicial power is vested in a Supreme Court and such inferior tribunals as the Legislature shall establish. A Chief Justice and two Associates compose the Supreme Court. The fifth article provides for the election of all the officers named in the

The constitution was adopted on the 10th March, 1849.
The first General Assembly met on the 2d of July. Millard Snow was eected Speaker of the House; Alfred Carrington, Clerk; John D. Lee, Anaistant Clerk; and Geo. D. Grant, Sergeant-at-Arms.

After the organization the chairman announced to the House that a major-ty of all the votes of the people had been given for the adoption of the Co tution; and that Brigham Young had received a majority of all the votes for Governor; Beber C. Kimball for Licatemant Governor; Wm Richards for Secretary of State; Win Clayton for Anditor for Public Accounts, Jos S. Heywood for Treasurer; and they were severally informed thereof.

On the 3d a resolution was passed providing for a joint committee to memoralize Congress for a State or Territorial Government; which was afterwards reported and adopted.

the votes, was declared duly elected.

On the 19th the Legislature adjourned sine die. Before doing so they adopted a memerial to Congress, in which they set forth the reasons which have induced them to organize a State Government. They cite the failure of Congress to provide a government for the territory acquired from Mexico, the abrogation of the Mexican law, the attarchy which has followed. "The revolver and the bowie knife," they say, "have been the highest law of the land—the strong have prevailed against the weak while persons, property, character, and religion have been unaided, and virtue unprotected." Finally, they represent that there is now a sufficient number of inhabitants residuely within the State of Descret to support a State Government, and te relieve the General Government from the expense of a Territorial Government, and they therefore ask that the Constitution accompanying this memorial be ratihey therefore ask that the Constitution accompanying this memorial be rati-ied, and that the State of Descret be admitted into the Union on an equal footng with the other States, or that such form of Government may be given to hom as may be deemed expedient; and that their Delegate may be received them as may be deemed expedient; and that their Delegate may be received and their interests p operly represented in the Congress of the United States. Not a word is said in the Constitution about slavery or the Wilnied proviso, such things not having entered into the imaginations of law-givers as important for their welfare. The Constitution will be pressed upor Congress, and, if ratified, two new Senators and a Representative will soon appear in that body from the State of Deteret—a State which was without a settled inhabitant four years ago, and which is some twenty-five hundred nilles from the seat of the Federal Government.

We think we can see in this application, the germ of much future trouble—of a war between the Mormons and the other settlers of California such as was waged between them and the people of Missiani and Illinois. The custom, as far as we can learn, has always been, heretofore, for Congress to lay off a State, and not for any portion of the people of a territory to conditions. These men, being a portion of the inhabitants of the territory of California, have, without any sort of warrant as far as we can see, crested an imperium in imperio, a State within a State, solely by virthe of their own California, have, without any sort of warrant as far as we can see, created an imper um in imperio, a State within a State, solely by virthe of their own authority. By reference to the map, it will be seen that they propose to the the fermiory of California nearly in two, taking themselves an entireous slice, and leaving the fregments afterwards to unite as they may. The rest of California, when this Marmon State shall have been formed, will resemble a squake Board out of which a large triangle has been sawed. So large will the new State be, and in such a fragmentary condition will it leave the vest of the territory, that it will be difficult to form a State of respectable size to a or one of the fragments. of any one of the fragments.

We cannot think that the people of California will over commut to see their territory mutilated in such a brange fashion; and we have no don't they will protest 'vigorously against it. The whic's Territory will be an insistent as a State at the next sension; and which it stall have been thus a mitted, it will be time enough to talk about dividing i.

Thus do we hope to one Free Sodism and the Walmot Provise kills difference—and their deaths will put an end to the aspirations aim mischiromen projects at all those whose political expital they have been for this lety time past. New deated may follow in good time—and we pray God that this will be the last new territory we may ever have to be a bone of companion between the North and the South. Rather let harmony, peace and time, an identity of interests, and a common destiny, be united to the common Union, comented by the blood of our common maccetors, and endeated by the blood of our common maccetors, and endeated by the property of their sufferings and triumphs. memery of their sufferings and triumple.
