POETICAL.

"What Ails My Love."
ANSWERED BY HERSELF.
On verdant banks my Mary sat,
Mid buttercup and daisy—
And I reclined without my hat,
And felt entrained, but lazy.
Bright foliage waved our heads above,
And many a songster twittered;
The streamlet, like our "course of love,"
Ran smoothly on and glittered.
Simple, yet 't'wen sublime our fare,
Ham sandwiches I'd bought her;
Cape-sherry, too, my love had there,
(She likes it mixed with water.)
Deeply we quaffed our fill of joy,
Deeply our wine in glasses;
The ham was good—Can ought annoy
When time so blithely passes!
Stern fate! as thus in calmest bliss
My love and I sat eating,
She paused—what sudden blight was this!
My heart "gan wildly beating.
Breathless I asked, "Why, why that tear—
That check so brightly flushing—
That classic brow, so white and clear,
Deep as the sunset flushing.
That voice so silvery, soft and low,
Now tremulous and broken;
Say, whence that dead or writhing woe,
Too fearful to be spoken?
Oh, tell me—tell me quick—the cause!
Not long sweet Mary hid it;
With deep-drawn sighs she said, "Oh laws!
It was the mustard did it."
It appears that two hundred and fifty millions of United States bonds are held in Germany. Only a portion of these will be returned, and at the present rate of gold they could not be profitably exchanged. The larger portion of these securities are retained for investment, and are more likely to remain so than the bonds of any other government. They will more probably rise than fall in public estimation in Holland and Germany. In fact, it is believed that, pending the war, there will be a large demand for our Government securities abroad, at enhanced prices. I. that is, the Government gold premium would be long sustained. Gold closed yesterday at 158.

Radical Conspiracy.

The Washington Republican, [Admin.] of yesterday, in its leading editorial, alleges the existence of a treasonable conspiracy on the part of a certain political faction at the North. It says:
It is nothing less than a conspiracy to overthrow the Constitution under the guise of a new construction of the second paragraph of the first section of article II of that instrument, which is in these words: "Each State shall appoint, in such manner as the Legislature thereof may direct, a number of electors equal to the whole number of Senators and Representatives to which the State may be entitled in the Congress."
The new construction is that no State is entitled to appoint any electors which shall not have Senators and Representatives in Congress at the time. Starting out upon this unsound hypothesis, the conspirators resolved that no Senators and Representatives from eleven States whose re-election should be admitted to seats in Congress until after 1868!
This rebellion is the key-note to the obstinate refusal of Congress to admit to their rightful seats Senators and Representatives whose loyalty was never doubted, and to the organized opposition in Congress to what is known as THE PRESIDENT'S plan of restoration.
Referring to the various pretences assigned by the Radicals for excluding Southern representatives, the Republican declares "that none of these reasons control the question a single hour. Only the idea that an unrepresented State cannot have electors of President and Vice President does!"
Repudiating as an absurdity the theory that the electoral voice of a State depends upon its full and actual representation in Congress, instead of upon the number of representatives to which the State is entitled, the Republican says that the conspiracy has yet another feature. It is held that if the Southern States should send in their electoral votes, the simple refusal of the President of the Senate to open the certificates would suffice to effect their total exclusion. "The comments of the Republican upon this are worthy to be pondered:
"We cannot contemplate any attempt to stifle the electoral voice of a State by such means without the most painful apprehensions. We greatly mistake the temper of our people if it would not provoke a conflict quite as 'irrepressible,' if not as bloody, as that which has just terminated."
Secretaries of the Treasury.
The Treasury Department was created by act of Congress approved September 2, 1789. The following list of the Secretaries from the creation of the Department down to the present time, with date of appointment, State from which appointed, together with the year of birth, and, if not surviving, the year of death, except in two or three cases where the date of birth or death has not been learned, will be found worth preservation. We have not seen so full a schedule published in any book:

The Washington Republican argues that the natural result of the Radical policy is to throw the Southern people upon themselves and their own resources, for sympathy and for prosperity. The tax on cotton, for instance, will prompt them to manufacture what they grow, instead of sending it to Lowell. The Republican argues that the South will thus be built up into a strong power.
We have never doubted that practically the South has been injured by the absorbing devotion of its leading minds to political pursuits. If it had been a sifting of the energy upon industrial development, that it has upon federal politics, it would be as prosperous and great as a section, as its wisdom and valour have made the United States as a nation. The Radical legislation, therefore, which is expected to retard and injure it, may have exactly the opposite effect. It may compel the South to turn its attention exclusively to the development of its wonderful resources, and if this is the result, it will be a blessing in disguise.—Ball. E. Transcript.
