Over the household aunt Lizzie, a tried and trusted old woman presided, whom the other servants regard as mistress, in all but name.

Many a well filled box of "good things," packed by Annie's hand, found its way to Leon's company. Those who have lived on Confederate soldiers fare, know what a treat a box from home was, in those days.

Leon's Regiment had followed the gallant Jackson all through his victorious campaigns, but now that great hero had fallen, and the Government with the hope of speedily terminating the war, determined to invade the enemies country.

Aunt Lizzie enters. She is still house-keeper. Annie had fearlessly read her the proclamation of emancipation...

He enters, Annie's name is spoken in the old dear musical tone, and an instant more and she is laughing and crying in her brothers arms.
