Singular.-The present term of Middlesex over and terminer, and general quarter sessions has been one extraordinary interest. On the 20th instant, the trial of Catharine D.ng-Wall came before the quarter sessions, on a charge of horse-stealing.

The court house was filled with anxious spectators. Joseph Warren Scutt Esq. with his usual philanthropy, volunteered his services in behalf of the unfortunate stranger, and distinguished himself with extraordinary, a-bility, and with such effect as to draw tears from the audience. The story of this pour girl is pathetic and singularly romantic. Having formed an attachment for a young man in the service of her father, named Charles Stuarty he was banished from the house of his employer, and it is supposed sailed for America. It appears that she became so ardeatly attached to him that she assumed man's apparel -travelled from Yorkshire to Liver pool, where she engaged as a common sailor, and sailed in search of her loy-

She arrived safely at New-York, and after wandering some time through the streets of that city, she travelled to Boston, from thence to Philadelphia, and even to New-Orleans. After a fruitless search there, she refurned again to New-York, and still meeting with disappointment, she came over to New Jersey on her way to Philadelphia, and having atopped for the night at a base near Kingston, wearied, broken-hearted, dejected, and in a foreign land, the horrible idea of suicide presented itself as the only end of her sufferings. But from this dreadful and metancholy alternative she was diverted by circumstances alto-gether providential.

Instead therefore of pursuing her original intention, she caught one of the horses in the field in which the barn was situated, and rode off toward New Brunswick; the other horse folowed. Circumstances (and her own confession) all go to prove that she meant to make herself amenable to the law-and horse-stealing being in her own country punishable by death, she sought it as an end to her sufferings and sorrows.

These were the impressions (as far as public opinion was expressed) con-cerning this poor and unfortunate stranger, whose generous love and enduring attachment (to use the language of another) "seem more like the tales of romance than the truth of narrative."

The story proves that she is a noble and warm hearted girl, and that she deserves the farther protection of our citizens. In the restoration of this forlars hapless stranger to her parental fire side, the upright, the honest, and chivalrous citizen will readily co-operate, not only in good wishes, but in good and generous deeds. And since unhappy fortune has deprived her of her lover, may she spend her future days in quiet with her family and

The accused when put upon her trial pleaded guilty, and refused to retract it, but her council was permitted by the court to enter a plea of not guilty. and the case went to the jury, who brought in a verdict of not guilig. No one appeared against her, such was the sympathy excited in her case, and so strong was the belief that the act she committed was one of phrenzy, and not of deliberate intention. New Brunswick, N. J. Fredonian.

The National Intelligencer of the 13th, in noticing the debate in the Senate, the day before, on the French paragraphs

"One of the most interesting incidents of the day, and one as unusual as it was gratifying, was the entrance into the Senate Chamber of the venerable Chief Justice, who, after the adjournment of the Supreme Court, repaired to the Senate to hear Mr. Webster. He was handed to a seat by one of the most distinguished membirs, and the evident sensation of affectionate respect which pervailed all who witnessed his entrance, was delightful to every be folder, as a sponinneous homage to age; victue, and public service "

An incident which displayed, in a striking manner, the moditionave character and modest deportment of Judge Marshall, occurred lately in the House of Delegates. While the dense crowd in the lobby and gallery was assembled to hear Mr. Wickham's humours | earlier. ous and ingenious argument against the bill authorising the corporation of Rec'imond to subscribe to the James River improvement, the Chief Justice was seen quietly seated in the gallery, listening attentively to the debate. When discovered there, the Speaker very promptly despatched the sergeant at-arms, to conduct him to a seat in the half, but the offer was politely teclined, the Judge being satisfied with his seat, and reluctant to disturb. even momentarily, any portion of the rapt listeners who had preceded him in their attendance.
