

Despair and I. BY DICK TINYS, ORNT. Thy hand, thou grim old gentleman, Of sulphurous breath and snaky hair-Curl up thy tail and packet it, And sent theo in a chair. Since we must be familiars . In weal as well as woe, Awhile, come let me question thee Why it is destined so!

Come-take the goblet, fot us quaff A draught of ruby wine-Thou hotrible old gentleman, A health to thee and thine: welcome thee, as thou art here, Yet tell me, I pray, The cause why we in fellowship Are meeting here to-day.

He seated him and grasped the bewi, And deep its treasures quaffed, Then dashed it shivered to the floor, And bitterly he laughted; I felt his breath upon my cheek, And it was icy cold-And the moisture on his bloated hand Was like death's slimy mould.

"He, ha-I'll tell thee; hast thou not Burned with ambition's flame And longed to leave behind on earth A never-dving name! And have not all thy glorious dreams Past auddenly away? And yet-and yet-thou askest me Why I am here to day."

'Tis not enough-why should I yield My spirit to despair, Because I find ambition A bubble of the airl Hence-hence, I charge thee, for the death Of fame shall never be Unto a heart of steel like mine, A source of misery.

A heart of steel -Hast thou not felt That friendship is a dream, And that the throngs that 'round thee press Are never what they seem! Ha, thou dost shudder-it is so-Thy spirit has been stung, And by the treachery of friends Most bitterly been wrung.

Yes, it is so-but why should I O'er faithless friendship pine! The tree can best retain its bloom Without a sheltering vine: Away, I charge thee once again, My fate is in my wifl, And though I stand on earth slone, I will be happy still.

And hast thou never, never loved. And bent to beauty's power, And found there was a cankered sore, When thou hadst grasped the flower! Hast thou not felt the bitterness Of loving when in vain? I see, I sec-for thou dost wriths As one that is in pain.

Back, baffled fiend; the flame that burned Has strengthened me the more: As when the fire has scorched the steel, Tis stronger than before. Away, away, thou harbinger Of darkness and of dread, Off-scamper-leave me, or I'll threw This bottle at your head.

Bo, so-I've scared the fiend away, I am a man again. Let all the world be false to me, I will not yield to pain.
