Not Much To Contend With In City Court

Judge H. Paul Strickland had little to contend with in Dunn Recorder's Court other than a long stream of public drunks Thursday morning.

He was left off on 12 months probation after paying a $5 fine and costs. Judge Strickland ordered him not to molest Mattie Council again during the probationary period.

Tribute Paid To Buie's Creek School At Meeting

Ten ladies of the faculty of Buie's Creek School were guests of the Civic Club at its regular Tuesday dinner meeting. Tributes were paid to the school and its faculty by B. P. Marshbanks, business manager of Campbell College, and by Torrey Johnson, principal of the school.

"Up to 64 years ago," said Marshbanks, "the average public school term lasted only six to eight weeks. There was no state supported high schools." He then went on with a resume of the history of public education of the State in general and of Buie's Creek in particular.

Because of the dearth of State supported schools more than 30 denominational schools were founded, most of them Baptist. Just before 1907 the state appropriated $100,000 or just over $1,000 per county for public school education. In 1907 that sum was increased to $200,000. By 1913 each county was required to give assurance that 4 months of public instruction would be provided, but this was far below the national average.

Sixty-four years ago local education centered in Barclaysville, and Buie's Creek youngsters had to go there to school. About that time for some reason the school was moved from Barclaysville to a new building which stood in Buie's Creek at about the same location as that now occupied by the Kivett Building. In 1887 the local citizens built a new school, 49x23 feet, with a big fireplace and chimney. This cost $300. There were 16 pupils. J. A. Campbell was the principal, and the school was a joint public and private venture. He was paid a lump sum (whatever the county could raise) for providing about five months of school. Only one present resident of Buie's Creek attended classes in that building. He is Sion Mitchell.

That first building was burned in 1900 and until the present Kivett Building of Campbell College was completed about 1909, classes were held in a rough wood structure, the tabernacle, which "could have made an excellent Burley tobacco barn," according to the speaker.

In these early days whole families often attended school together, parents and children.

The Pierson Building was added in 1915. In 1928, when the D. Rich Memorial Building was completed, all public school activities were concentrated in the Kivett Building. This lasted until three years ago, when the present excellently designed public school building was opened.

"And yet," concluded Marshbanks, "some folks say that they do not believe in evolution!" Johnson opened his remarks with the statistical statement that there are only six states whose teachers are better qualified, only one with a greater pupil load per teacher. Yet North Carolina stands 29th in average salary scale. "Teachers must be half fool and half missionary," he observed.

He then went on to offer high praise to the job that is being done by the teachers in Buie's Creek. He thanked Campbell College for its help through the years and for its continuing help. He thanked the lunchroom managers, the school board, and the community as a whole.

In addition to Johnson, himself, and Roy Parker, who are members of the Civic Club, the following guests were among the 83 people present at dinner: Miss Ruby Williams, Miss Elaine Brooks, Miss Martha McKay, Miss Mabel Burt, Mrs. Ada Brickhouse, Mrs. Josephus Bradley, Mrs. Virginia Chenault, Miss Lorraine Britt, Miss Elizabeth Stillwell, Mrs. Amanda Turlington. The last three are Campbell College teachers who also assist in the school. Another high school teacher, Miss Dorothea Stewart, was unable to attend.

Dinner was prepared by Mrs. Torrey Johnson, Mrs. William Hart, Mrs. B. F. Wiggins and Mrs. B. P. Marshbanks.

Electricity On Farm Is Called Boon To Output

WEST FARMINGTON, C.—Within seven years, it is estimated, that electricity on an average farm can increase by more than 51 per cent the money earned per hour of productive labor.

That's the idea promoted by a practical electrification experiment on the Joseph Motts farm near here.

The evidence that farm electrification more than pays its own way was contained in a report prepared for Westinghouse Electric's farm electrification department.

Since 1944, when electric power first reached the 262-acre Motts farm, records have been kept on the farm's production and progress.

The report said intelligent use of electricity on a farm can eliminate a great many man-hours of hard work and do a better job at considerably lower cost.

The experiment is being carried out under conditions identical to those faced by the average farmer. Motts bought new electrical equipment at retail prices, making only the profits from the farm's operations to do it. In 1944, the farm returned 66 cents for each hour of work he put into the various productive enterprises. By 1950, the return had increased to $1.11 for each hour of work. By reducing the time required for basic farm operations, Motts and his son had more time for other enterprises, or for leisure.

Cash Return Better

The report pointed out that although farm prices have increased during the seven-year period, the cash return on the Motts farm has kept well ahead of the general rise in prices received for all commodities.

Motts said that although there is no such thing as push button farming, electricity has proved to be one of his most valuable and inexpensive hired hands. He said that unlike many other services, the more of it he uses, the cheaper it becomes.

Hoop skirts worn by ladies of the court around the time of Henry III inspired the creation of a new armless chair, the farthingale. Women had been unable to fit themselves into conventional arm-chairs.
