Red Stand On Buffer Zone Blasts Hopes Of Early Korean Armistice

Compromise Is Turned Down By Communist Team

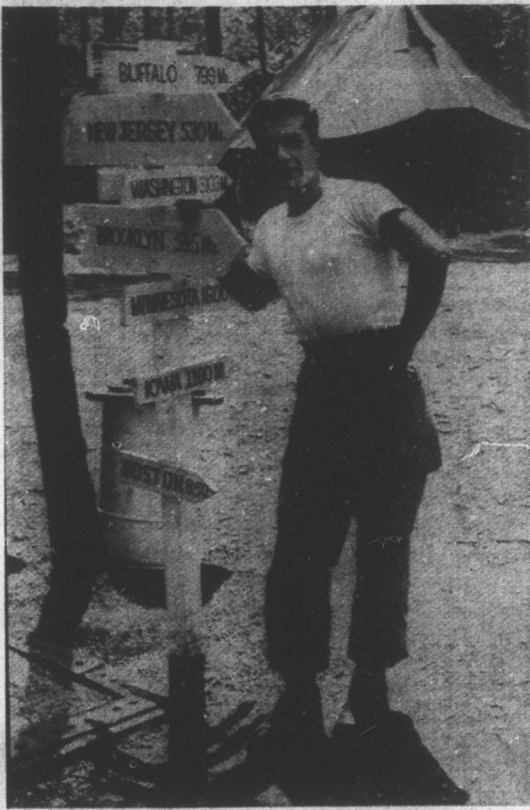

By Earnest Hoberecht UP Staff Correspondent PEACE CAMP, Korea (AP) Communist negotiators sat in stony silence for two hours and 11 minutes at the resumed cease-fire talks today, then flatly refused to consider any compromise solution to the deadlock over an armistice buffer zone.

The Communist stand virtually blasted hopes for an early armistice in the Korean war. Some persons believed that only an "agree or fight" ultimatum by the U. N. would budge the Reds.

A United Nations communique called chief Communist delegate Gen. Nam Il's silence "historical and unprecedented."

DISCUSSION REFUSED He broke it, the communique said, only to refuse adamantly to discuss:

- 1. The battle line area as a possible location of the cease-fire line or buffer zone. 2. Any line other than the 38th Parallel as a possible line of military demarcation. 3. Any other item on the military armistice conference agenda. Despite the seemingly hopeless deadlock, the negotiators agreed to meet for a 21st session at 11 a. m. Saturday (8 p. m. Friday EST). The meeting was the first since the U. N. command broke off the negotiations Sunday in protest against the presence of armed Red troops in the area. It also was the longest since the conference began July 10, lasting four hours and 12 minutes. Chief U. N. negotiator Vice Adm. C. Turney Joy opened the 20th session with a statement suggesting the possibility of a compromise on (Continued On Page Seven)

GOING MY WAY? — Just to make homesickness more acute, some way in an Army unit stationed near Dunn erected this signpost to remind the soldiers how far from home they are. Some, however, may have found a home here; the bemused G. I. shown in the picture evidently doesn't care how far Sank Centre or Wallis-Walla is from Dunn. (Daily Record photo by J. W. Temple, Jr.)

State Department Loses Aid Authority

WASHINGTON. — (AP) — Chairman James P. Richards (D-SC), whose House Foreign Affairs Committee voted to strip the State Department of authority over foreign aid, predicted quick House approval of the administration's giant global aid program.

The committee voted 20 to 0 late last night to put a new super-administrator of cabinet status in charge of all foreign aid, both military and economic. Such an official would be independent of the State Department.

By the same vote, the committee sliced only $651,254,000 from President Truman's request for a record $8,500,000,000 to bolster free nations against the threat of Communist aggression.

PASSAGE EXPECTED Richards said he was sure the House would pass the bill in the exact amounts favored by the committee. The House is scheduled to take up the measure about the middle of next week. Actual appropriations would be made at a later date.

The committee's action in taking from Secretary of State Dean Acheson any direct part in foreign aid was expected to soothe strong anti-Acheson sentiment among many lawmakers particularly Southern Democrats.

Richards, who carries weight with the Southerners, said the proposed administrator, to be appointed by the President, would be "his own boss—and boss of the program." He would be equal to the head of any executive department, Richards explained, with a cabinet member's $22,500 annual salary.
