Germany's Military Might Moves Into Limelight Again

By RUDY WECHMAR (United Press Staff Correspondent) BONN, Germany.—After six years of licking their wounds, the survivors of the once powerful Nazi army are marching into the limelight again.

Worried allied officials and a skeptical world wonder whether it will mean a revival of goose-stepping German militarism or a helpful boost to western defense efforts.

Former German soldiers in ten-division strength have created a new federal veterans' organization. The question is whether it will become a new para-military body like the "Stahlhelm" (Steel Helmet), which paved the way for Adolf Hitler.

It has not yet shown clearly whether it will become a pro-government movement supporting Chancellor Konrad Adenauer's rearmament drive to turn into a nationalist-militarist "reserve" to crush democracy when it thinks the time is ripe.

Allied officials are pinning their hopes on several outspoken anti-Communist statements by ex-generals who led the organization. SOLDIERS RALLIED

Rallying more than 120,000 former soldiers, the new federation unites veterans of such crack outfits as the Afrika Korps, the Panzer division "Grossdeutschland" (Greater Germany), and ex-general Herman B. Ramcke's "Green Devil" paratroopers.

In Bonn, about 30 former German generals decided to reorganize their 89,000-member "pension association" into the "German Soldiers Federation."

In Isenroth, 38 officers and men of the late Field Marshal Erwin Rommel's Afrika Korps formed another veteran organization and at Brunswick, Ramcke's paratroopers held a 4,000-man reunion with their old division commander, just released from a French war crimes prison.

The socialist opposition party fears that if there is no democratic control of these groups, they may be used either against labor unions or become a nucleus for nationalist tendencies in Germany.

Allied observers say there is no immediate danger. The federation's acting chairman, ex-Admiral Gottfried Hansen, is said to be one of the "democratic generals" of the old Wehrmacht. The Afrika Korps sent the federal president, Theodor Heuss a telegram in which it pledged support "to democracy."

Ramcke, however, made what allied officials considered "strange" demands for releasing all former German generals now held as "so-called war criminals" in allied prisons.
