Compromise Site Sought For Meeting

MUNSAN, Korea IP—United Nations and Communist liaison officers looked over a possible new compromise site for resumption of the Korean oease-fire talks today. Apparently no decision was reached, however, because another liaison meeting was scheduled for 10 a.m. tomorrow (8 p.m. today EST). The possible compromise site was a bridge over the Sachon river, a half-mile southeast of Pan Mun Jom.

Barly resumption of the armistice conference was expected. Vice Admiral C. Turner Joy, head of the U. N. truce team, flew back to Korea from Tokyo soon after today's liaison session.

He was accompanied by Maj. Gen. Laurence C. Craigie, another member of the U. N. truce delegation. They went immediately to the advance Allied camp at Munsan, some 10 miles southeast of Pan Mun Jom, site of the liaison meeting.

U. S. Marine Col. James C. Murray, acting chief U. N. liaison officer, and North Korean Col. Chang Chun San, head of the Communist liaison team, and their assistants met for 2½ hours Wednesday.

CONFER IN BEAN PATCH
For the first 30 minutes, they talked in a circus-like tent erected by the Reds on a bean patch across the road from Pan Mun Jom's four mud-walled houses.

Then the groups walked a half mile down the road to a bridge over the meandering Sachon river. They stayed there for about 10 minutes, making notes, referring to maps and pointing. The exchange was amiable, punctuated by smiles and laughter.

The powerful armored task force from the U. S. 2nd Division thrust up a valley north of Yanggu in an attempt to break the resistance of Communists still holding out on the northernmost peak of "Heartbreak Ridge" and adjacent heights.

The attacks jumped off under cover of an early morning fog while the Chinese apparently were moving up to relieve battered North Korean units on the flaming east-central front.

A tank officer said the Reds broke and fled "in every direction" under withering fire from the tanks and supporting infantry. The Temillimeter guns of the tanks also blasted mountain positions on either side of the valley.

A division briefing officer said Chinese troops also were observed fleeing one mountaintop position, but did not make it clear whether this was on "Heartbreak Ridge."

She said the group had visited other cities with similar community projects, in order to get ideas that would be applicable here. Plans for the structure, costing approximately $35,000, were drawn up by L. B. Burney, Raleigh architect.

Land for the building had been leased to the club for a 89 year term, with the sole condition that provision should be made there for the public library. The land, across from the Armory, would be an ideal site for such a building.
