Paroled Negro

Cpl. H. G. Morrow and Trooper E. H. Jackson of the highway patrol halted Miller as he was enroute toward Greenville, 20 miles away. They asked to see his driving license.

As the Negro attempted to think of an excuse for not having one, a woman's screams were heard, and the officers discovered Mr. Boyd.

They returned to the Boyd home with the woman and found the body of her husband. Paul said Boyd must have died almost instantly from a charge of buckshot from a 16-gauge shotgun, fired at point-blank range through a window.

Morrow said Miller hadn't touched the young wife and had "just commanded her to get in the trunk."

PREPARING FOR BED Mrs. Boyd told police she and her husband were preparing to retire on Thanksgiving eve when they heard a shot just outside their window.

She said she told him to turn off the lights but almost at that instant another blast from a gun struck him down.

Mrs. Boyd said Miller then barged into the room and forced her to take her husband's car keys from his lifeless body.

She said Miller told her to come with him. Clad only in a flimsy nightgown, Mrs. Boyd grabbed up a pair of blue jeans as some protection from the biting cold.

Outside, in 25-degree weather, Miller forced her into the car's trunk and drove away, she said.

WATCHED BEDROOM Miller told police he watched the boy's bedroom window until Boyd came into clear view over the sights of his shotgun, then fired. He said he wanted the man's keys and was willing to kill to get them.

Police said Miller admitted he had known Boyd for some time but denied there was any friction between them.

Miller was paroled last year from a 15-to-20-year sentence for first-degree burglary.

Mrs. Boyd told her rescuers she had almost given up hope of getting help when the car was stopped. She was in a "bad condition of shock and half-frozen," Morrow said.

Movie Triangle

"THAT'S JUST DANDY" "Well," gasped Barbara. "That's just dandy. That's just fine by me!"

She denied Tom's assertion that her plan to make a movie with Neal was at the bottom of the marital bust-up.

"I know that's what he said," she said. "That's all he could say. 'But I don't want to tell the real reason now. I don't want to unless I have to.'"

She said she has talked to Neal "a couple of times" since separating with Tom but only to "talk over business."

Barbara said she didn't feel bad about losing her husband, her movie job and her ex-boy friend with her in 48 hours. What worries her is all the headlines she's making.

"I can't stand this!" she moaned. "Honestly, I think I'm going to have a nervous breakdown. It's driving me crazy. I just want to be left alone."

Manless at the moment, the voluptuous blonde started to yell "try to struggle on somehow."

"I'll try to get a job in pictures again," she added. "I don't know what's going to happen. I have no plans. I'm just going to stay in my house and crawl into a hole and wait until this quieta down."

"Ya ouyon albi, ana bahibbic awi," King whispered to Samia. "That means she is the eyes of my heart and I love her very much," King explained to reporters. "I learned it from a Syrian friend back in Houston."

8-MINUTE EMBRACE King, who has adopted the Moslem faith in anticipation of his marriage, and assumed the name of Abdullah, then fell into an eight-minute embrace with Samia.

Let me get some breath, honey," he said at last. Emerging breathless, he said that as he had adopted Moslem customs he was entitled to four wives and would like to marry three in addition to Samia.

"I'd much rather you married me four times," Samia said. "Samia called her beloved 'Uggy,' the pet name she selected for him after they met in a Paris night club."
