MIDLAND, Mich.—It looked like a dim Christmas today for passers-by who helped themselves to the tree lights in a box that fell from a moving truck. Truck driver Don Cook who came back to find the box empty, said, "that was a box of burned-out bulbs that I was hauling off to the dump."

They're shown here holding an afternoon's catch, which includes two Palmetto chubs, one weighing 31.5 pounds and the other 27 pounds, a Palm Trout weighing "from 4 to 16 pounds," wrote Mince. Mr. Mac, one of Dunn's most popular business men, wrote The Record, "You might show this picture to the Lyar's Club back home." Left to right are: Joe McLamb, Mince and John A. McLamb. They're staying at the Island Motel in Fort Myers Beach.

appear in the blood stream of persons who experience resentment, anxiety and tension. Alcohol causes these mysterious blood factors to disappear.

THE CHARACTERISTICS

Resentment, anxiety and tension are outstanding characteristics of most alcoholics. Under Diethelm's theory, addicts may have a real physical reason for turning to alcohol to get relief. So far, however, his work is considered "interesting" but too preliminary to be of any value for treatment.

Here is a summary of current views on medical treatments for alcoholism now in use:

Antabuse: This Danish drug, recently approved for general use by American physicians, has proved one of the most effective ways to "separate" addicts from alcohol. Patients taking it become violently ill if they drink. The battle against the bottle is no longer up to the patient as long as he takes antabuse daily.

Antabuse, alone, is no "cure." Specialists say additional treatment such as psychological guidance, is necessary. Otherwise antabuse is return to their uncontrolled drinking habits once they stop taking the drug. It can be used only under a physician's direction and is sold only on prescription.

Vitamins: Dr. Roger J. Williams, director of the Biochemical Institute at the University of Texas, believes alcoholics have inborn deficiencies in body chemistry. He thinks the appetite for alcohol can be permanently slaked when the deficiencies are made up by vitamins and other necessary nutrients.

VITAMINS HELP

Despite some dramatic results achieved by Williams, most medical authorities believe vitamins treat the effect, rather than the cause of alcoholism.

Cortical hormones: ACHT, cortisone and adrenal cortical extract are among the newer drugs found highly useful in preventing delirium tremens and other violent phases that often follow prolonged acute intoxication. Most researchers believe they are not proved effective for rehabilitating the chronic alcoholic.

Aversion: Dr. Walter L. Voegtlin of the University of Washington reported well over half of 5,000 patients remained "dry" for at least five years after undergoing the aversion, or conditioned reflex, treatment.

With this treatment, the patient is given emetine or some other drug that causes vomiting. This is timed so that the vomiting occurs just when the patient is given a drink. Repeating the procedure will, in many, create an automatic habit pattern in which the person gets sick at the smell of a drink even after the treatment stops.

Tomorrow: Psychiatry's role in treating alcoholics.

have an accurate estimate of its resources and its needs.

"We feel that it is a good idea to know just where we stand in order to determine just where we are going," Bishop Baker explained.

An unusual feature of the census will be its anonymity. Although the parishioners will be asked a number of questions, his or her name will not appear on the questionnaire. The statistics gathered by the census takers will be compiled, first on a parish, then on a diocese and later on a National level.

Professor Dennis, an expert in this field, is in residence in the Diocese of North Carolina for six months, in order to aid the various parishes in making the survey. The vestrymen met at the Parish House of St. Stephens Church in Erwin and later adjourned to the General Lee Room at Johnson's

"You must publicize this route and encourage its use."

Metz pointed out that the 301 Association has no subsidy and only exists through voluntary dollars. Advertisements in metropolitan newspapers, strip maps and billboards, were used to advertise the highway.

"As of now," he declared, "the association lacks $1,500 of having enough to pay current bills, consequently there will be no more advertising in the metropolitan newspapers." He said that about 500,000 strip maps had been distributed.

He said that at the last meeting of the association it was reported that the U. S. 17 Association had raised $17,000 to promote the use of that highway. "Half of that is as much as the 301 Association had last year," he declared.

"We in Fayetteville know that when business on 301 falls off," Metz asserted, "it affects all business."

Metz pointed out that there was not a person in Harnett County that did not share indirectly in the profit derived from the tourist trade over this highway.

DEVISION MEETING LATER

He said that as soon as practical after Christmas, there would be a divisional meeting and the Association itself will meet in February.

The meeting was held in the General Lee Room of Johnson's Diner, and J. D. Barnes, the manager, pointed out that advertising his place as far north as Rocky Mount had doubled his business.

A pertinent fact brought out at the meeting was that the new Delaware River bridge and the cut-off bypassing Baltimore, will siphon even more traffic down Highway 301.

Pending the election of the regular corps of officers, Earl McD. Westbrook, past president of the Highway 301 Association presided.

Asks Santa

Most of the letter are written in childish scrawls by wistful kids, asking for toys. The Legionnaires find that most Texas boys ask for saddles and spurs. California and Florida children want swimming and sailing playthings. Kids in the Northern states want sleds, skis and skates.

Legion headquarters is one of the busiest places in this tiny incorporated town whose population ranges from nine to 35—depending on where you set the boundaries. The post office is almost as busy. It postmarks million of gift packages and greeting cards each year. Postmaster Elbert Heinke, who finds running the office a snap for 11 months of the year, hires more than 20 extra helpers to handle 3,500,000 to 4,000,000 pieces of mail this month.

Anticipating this increase, the post office goes on its holiday schedule beginning December 12. Service windows will be open from 8 a. m. to 6 p. m. Post office will be open all day Saturday, Dec. 15th.

Christmas greeting cards and packages for out-of-state delivery should be posted by December 15th. Those for local delivery at least a week before Christmas Day.

Post office windows are most crowded at lunch time, so Postmaster Ralph Wade advises that packages be mailed before 10 a. m. or between 1:30 and 3:30 p. m. The lines will be shorter then, and it's easier on the feet," he added.

A second joint subcommittee, meantime, bogged down in a debate over an exchange of war prisoners. The U. N. pressed in vain for an immediate exchange of data on prisoners and the right of international Red Cross representatives to visit Communist prison camps.

Cauld

one of the reasons the President flew back from Key West Sunday.

Naster, a Hollywood, Fla., businessman, sought through his attorneys to have his testimony kept secret as today's session opened, but the plea was rejected.

Rep. John W. Byrnes (R-Wis.) a member of the group, sent to the press table a statement criticizing McGrath's testimony yesterday and saying his attitude "cannot be tolerated for another day."

WANTS McGRATH OUSTED

"McGrath should be immediately replaced by an attorney general who is willing and able to assume responsibility for the proper operation of the Justice Department," Byrnes said.

Naster testified that Frank Nathan, promoter-gambler friend of Cauld's, first telephoned the ousted assistant attorney general from Miami Beach about Naster's desire to get a passport to go to Europe on business.

He said that a few days later he came to Washington, called Cauld at his home, and at his suggestion went to the State Department to talk about the problem.

Asked whether Nathan had told Cauld that he (Naster) was slated to be on parole until early April, 1951, Naster said he thought Nathan did.

Nathan and Naster have been accused by Abraham Teitelbaum, one-time attorney for Al Capone, of trying to shake him down for $500,000 to get his tax case fixed.

REPORTED SHAKEDOWN

Naster desired to avoid questioning about the reported shakedown, his attorney said, on grounds the case is now under consideration by a District of Columbia grand jury. The hearing was recessed for a while because he was "so upset" he could not answer questions intelligently.
