SAYS CONGRESS LATE
He has been disposing of wrongdoers as rapidly as they came to his attention, but Congress came along after the fact and made the headlines, he said.

Asked for examples of his continuing cleanup, he pointed out that he had dispensed with the services of several cabinet officers.

Mr. Truman said that Democratic Chairman Frank E. McKinney described him accurately when he said the chief Executive was "angry at being sold down the river" by government workers disloyal to him.

Who wouldn't feel that way, the President said, when a man takes an oath and does not live up to it? Asked whether that applied to Caudle, the President said it applied to all of the men who had been fired.

SATISFIED WITH MCKINNEY
Asked whether McKinney would continue as chairman of the national committee, the President said quickly that McKinney suited him right down to the ground.

He added that it pleased him when the newspapers did not say something he had done because it convinced him he was right.

He said he agreed with McKinney that corruption will not be an issue in 1952, because it will be cleaned up long before.

"If there's nothing new about this, then why are you talking this dirty action?" he was asked.

The President said he wanted to have the situation completely developed to show that most government employees are honest citizens and he does not want them to be smeared by a dishonest few.

The President declined to discuss McKinney's $68-for-$1 stock deal involving the defunct Empire Tractor Corp., saying McKinney had covered that situation clearly himself.

outright mental illness in some cases.

Drinking makes the problems worse, but they can't face the problems without drinking.

Psychiatrists, and many other specialists, believe that no long-term "cure" is possible for these people without treatment of the underlying emotional disturbances.

It was three years ago when Mrs. W. made her first visit to Dr. Ruth Fox, a psychiatrist who also operates the New York Alcoholic Treatment Center, a private clinic.

BLAMED FAMILY
As the twice weekly, hour-long sessions progressed, Mrs. W. told how she blamed her husband and family for most of her problems.

Under guidance, she gradually recognized that many of her resentments stemmed from childhood days when she was jealous of an older sister her father seemed to prefer.

Always self-conscious, Mrs. W. began to drink when she was 21 to bolster her social courage. In three months of psychiatric sessions, Mrs. W. learned a lot about her emotional problems. But she still was drinking. She quit seeing the psychiatrist.

Six months later, Mr. W. frankly phoned Dr. Fox that his wife was having convulsions as the result of a prolonged drinking bout.

Mrs. W. was sent to a hospital and nursed back to a shaky sobriety. She agreed to try antabuse, a drug which causes nausea and prostration if a drink is taken.

AA DID IT
Mrs. W. resumed her psychiatric

Dope Thief Loots Physician's Bag

Dope thieves were still active in this section today.

Dr. Clarence L. Corbett, prominent Dunn physician, reported to police that the thief emptied his medical bag of everything except a bottle of alcohol.

The doctor said items missing included opium, syringes and all other dope. The loss was estimated at about $50.

A couple weeks ago, a medical bag was stolen from Dr. Charles W. Byrd.

visits. Soon she began also to attend meetings of Alcoholics Anonymous. Some years before she had tried AA, but it didn't "take."

This time she was able to subscribe to AA philosophies. Shortly Mrs. W. was running her household as a home. She became interested in church work. She took up interior decorating as a hobby.

Mrs. W. has not had a drink since she could safely stop taking antabuse a year ago. She stopped seeing the psychiatrist six months ago. She is considered a "recovered" alcoholic.

Psychiatry seldom "takes" unless the patient first stops drinking which most alcoholics can't or won't do.

Nevertheless, it has had a profound effect in altering the general medical profession's attitude toward alcoholics. It has pointed out ways in which family doctors can help.

Dunn Juries

state's case was going the way of all the rest. Two witnesses had asserted that they were in a stalled car and the defendant, entirely sober, had loaned them a jack to change a tire.

The third witness, who was supposed to have been with the other two took the stand. He fidgeted uncertainly, mopped his brow, and murmured, "I don't know anything about it, your Honor, I wasn't with these boys."

That was all that Max McLeod, then, solicitor, needed. The jury could do little other than return a guilty verdict in that case. Giddy enough, the only other conviction for drunken driving came in the next case, that of Henry Elliott on July 7, 1950.

CHANGED HIS MIND
In one other case involving drunken driving, James Broglin changed his mind after asking a jury trial and pleaded guilty. The jury which had been summoned was dismissed.

One defendant who had requested jury trial for drunken driving, Robert Smith, forfeited his bond by failing to appear. Maybe he should have taken a chance.

Not all the cases where trial by jury was requested involved the offense of drunken driving, although these were in the majority and all but eleven were motor vehicle law violations.

HERE'S THE RECORD
A rundown on the cases in which jury trials were requested, the charge, and the dispositions are as follows:

Earl Thomas McInard, drunken driving, not guilty; Eldredge Norris, fornication and adultery, not guilty; Charles Woodrow Jackson, driving drunk and expired license, not guilty; Columbus Barnes, non-support, two cases not pro; Richard Lee Curran, drunken driving, not pro.

Preston E. Parier, driving drunk, pleaded guilty to public drunkenness; Edward Brewington, non-support, prosecution terminated; Matthews and Frivolous and his wife taxed costs; John Andrew Jackson, drunken driving, possession and transportation, not guilty; W. A. Jones, removing crops, not guilty.

Albert Berton Parker, careless and reckless driving, not pro; Pernon McLamb, trespass, not pro; Kinston McIntyre, driving drunk, not guilty; Edward House, non-support, not pro; William Henry Jackson, drunken driving, guilty; Henry Elliott, drunken driving, guilty.

Monroe McLamb, drunken; Mm-Lamb, drunken driving, not pro; Moody Strickland, drunken driving, found guilty of careless and reckless driving; Robert Smith, drunken driving, bond forfeited; Wayland Godwin, speeding, bond forfeited; Wash. Monda, possession for sale, not guilty.

James Broglin, drunken driving, pleaded guilty and jury dismissed; Jesse Glenn Wilkins, drunken driving, plea of guilty to simple trespass accepted; James Robert Jones, drunken driving, not guilty; Wilbert Carr, assault, guilty; Tom Tyndall, aiding and abetting prostitution, not pro.

Norwood Benson, driving drunk, not guilty; George Starjell, drunken driving, not guilty; James Marvin Riddle, reckless driving, found guilty and appealed to Superior Court; Charles Mack Core, driving after license was revoked, plea of guilty to trespass accepted; Oscar McDowell, possession for sale, not guilty.

William Herbert Pope, reckless driving and transportation, plea of guilty to speeding accepted; Max E. Avery, reckless driving, not pro; John D. Wingate, possession for sale, not guilty; Albert Sutton, driving drunk, plea of guilty to careless and reckless driving accepted; Charles Welton Holmes, driving drunk, plea of guilty to trespass accepted; William James Ray, driving drunk, not guilty.

The last case was tried on November 25, which brings the record down to date.

On the basis of the record, the Solicitor's stance seems to be well taken. Perhaps it is better to convict them of lesser crime, even if only on the grounds that the law is the case so to a jury.
