Bethlehem and in the nearby Christian village of Bet Jallah, hotels and monasteries were filled to overflowing.

The devout will converge on Bethlehem in two lines, over roads that are roughly parallel. Because of the troubled situation, the traditional route still is open only to diplomatic and consular officials and United Nations personnel. The first two miles run through Israeli territory.

All others—clergymen as well as lay worshippers—will travel over a makeshift route through Jordan territory, twice the distance of the original route. It passes through the Jordan-held Old City of Jerusalem, skirts its walls, passes the Garden of Gethsemane and winds along the slopes of the Mount of Olives.

From Bethany the crude road passes through wild country and skirts the Israeli frontier settlement of Ramat Rachel in a wide semi-circle.

In Bethlehem itself, quiet prevailed. The little town where the Saviour was born was bypassed by the bitter fighting of three and a half years ago.

MIDNIGHT MASS
Catholics plan to hold high pontifical mass at midnight in the Church of St. Catherine, part of a group of structures comprising the Church of the Nativity.

At midnight, the bells in the Tower of the Nativity will ring out. Amid sacred music and the voices of choir boys, Patriarch Alberto Gorri will preside at the services.

Protestant groups planned simple services, including Bible readings and singing of traditional hymns. Many will go to Bethlehem early in the evening for carol singing.

In Jerusalem services will be held in all Roman and Greek Catholic, Maronite, Anglican and other Protestant churches and chapels.

Languages used in prayers will include Latin, Arabic, English, Greek and ancient Syriac, related to Aramaic which was Christ's mother tongue.

The Detroit city council made a special $300,000 appropriation for snow removal. The city already had spent $462,000, more than half of last year's total, to clear streets.

Paul Hobbs of Detroit became a hero for 250 motorists who were caught in the snow at Fairview, Ill. He struggled through hip-deep drifts three-quarters of a mile to a farmhouse where he telephoned state police for help. Police guided the motorists on foot and in emergency vehicles to town where residents they open their doors to them.

New York, which enjoyed unseasonably mild weather the past two days, was expected to feel the full force of the cold wave later today.

RUSH IN NEW YORK
The city's terminals were crowded with incoming and outgoing travelers. Incoming trains were delayed as much as 1-2 hours.

The Chicago and North Western Railway terminal at Chicago was crowded through the night with travelers who tried to catch up on benches, window seats and even on walkways. As a result, "resident" tramps were forced to spend the night on the streets in two-blow-zero cold.

Ransom Tyndall Freed On Parole

Ransom Tyndall, convicted of second degree murder in the slaying of intoxicated patron of the restaurant he operated on the Dunn-Erwin highway, has been paroled and will be released in time to spend Christmas with his family.

Tyndall was tried for the slaying of Edward Norris by stomping the man to death in the driveway of his restaurant. Tyndall told the court that Norris in a drunken condition had ordered a plate to take out and had thrown the food on the floor and cursed Mrs. Tyndall.

Angered, the restaurant owner had pushed the man outside, knocked him to the concrete driveway and beaten and kicked him to death. Prior to the incident, Tyndall had enjoyed a good reputation, and his friends found the slaying hard to believe.

These friends have continually forwarded petitions to Raleigh, and attorney D. C. Wilson, who defended Tyndall, said there were more than a thousand names on the petition that finally won freedom for Tyndall.

40 Dead

He was shaking with emotion from what he had seen below.

"It looks like we lost them all," he said.

The rescuers worked in teams in the dust-filled darkness to build a "tire block" aimed at smothering a dogged blast that hampered rescue operations all night.

The badly injured miners taken out were removed to West Frankfort Hospital. Their faces were black with coal dust blown into the skin by the force of the blast.

RELATIVES BREAK LINES
About 25 wives, mothers and daughters of the men trapped below broke through police lines and made their way to the shaft head where rescue headquarters were set up in the offices of the Chicago, Wilmington and Franklin Coal Co. owners of the mine.

They gathered in a silent, stunned little group, waiting for word of their menfolk. All had dressed hastily when word raced through the area after the blast.

One woman was in her nightgown and a shabby cloth coat. She trembled in the 19-degree temperature and her gaze never left the doors to the elevator leading down into the blasted pit.

Rescue teams said it was possible to work only about two hours in the choking darkness of the mine. Each man carried a portable oxygen tank strapped to his back. They groped through the darkness with the aid of lights attached to their helmets.

CONFUSION REIGNS
The cities of West Frankfort, Benton and West City were thrown into confusion by the explosion.

A crowd of about 2,000 persons was watching a high school basketball game when a loud speaker appeal was broadcast for "Dr. Bennett" to report to the mine.

The spectators, mindful of the mine disaster at Centralia on March 25, 1947, in which 111 men died, were electrified by the words, and immediately sensed something serious.

About 750 left their seats and followed the physician toward the mine.

A crowd estimated by state police at 2,000 persons, many of them wives, parents, brothers and sisters of the men in the mine, jammed a highway leading to the buildings which cluster about the mine entrance.

The mine is one of the largest in the world and holds the record for hoisting the greatest tonnage of coal in one day of any coal mine in the world.

But the boy is now able to re-enter school and to engage in play and "fairly normal activity," the doctors said.

They said his life span, barring complications, "should be normal."

The doctors did not minimize the seriousness of his condition, but scoffed at the idea that the child might not live until Christmas and that it might be his last Christmas.

Just like any other person, he could die at any time.

But with continued proper treatment, Granville Stephenson can live a fairly normal life and enjoy many more Christmas seasons.

Dr. English was particularly distressed at the reports and said he was sure they would be misleading to the family.

FARENS UNDERSTAND
"We have discussed the child's condition thoroughly and in great detail with the parents; they know his condition and understand the case," he said.

Medical bills have been a strain on the family, but Dr. Moore said he understood the family was getting along all right.

Members of the First Church, the Red Cross, and others have given assistance.

WANTS U. S. MONEY
For some time it has been rumored that the primary purpose of Churchill's visit to President Truman next month is to get several more billions in special aid.

Ultimately the 77-year-old Prime Minister, who remembers well how lend-lease kept Britain afloat during the war, may have to come to that.

But his closest associates say it won't be now. They insist Churchill is not going on his first official postwar trip to Washington with hat in hand.

He may make that clear tonight when he broadcasts to the nation over the BBC network, one of his last public acts before sailing for America a week from today.
