JOHNNY GODWIN

Johnny is the son of Mr. and Mrs. Herman Godwin and lives at 907 North Orange Avenue. He has twin sisters who came to school over here too. They are big girls now and are almost in High School, and from what Johnny tells us they are mighty smart. Johnny is too, and will do fine next year when he enters first grade. Johnny makes such beautiful buildings with blocks that Mrs. Marks believes that he will be an architect some day. Still he is mighty interested in planes and cowboys—so he may decide on a career as a pilot, or even round up little doggies.

We haven't been able to find out just which one of these girls over here is Johnny's special girl friend, but they all think he has mighty pretty brown eyes and they all like to sit by him to play Lotto, checkers and other games. At talking time he often tells us about things his sisters do at school, and he was as excited as they were when they had a birthday party this fall. He said he didn't care if they did the presents, because he got to play with all of them anyway. Johnny is a handsome, well-developed fellow, and likes to play rough and tumble games, but he can also settle down and do some mighty nice painting and coloring too. He is quite original when he plays with clay, and makes all kinds of animals, especially snakes, turtles, and rabbits.

inflation. . . Loudest voice against shiking taxes is White House Counsel, Charlie Murphy. He argues that the government can raise all the money it needs by closing tax loopholes for high bracket taxpayers, spreading the military budget over five years and curtailing government waste. Murphy fears voters will rebel at another tax boost in an election year; recommends holding the 1952 budget to the estimated 1952 income—about $70 billion. . . HST has offered to "compromise" by asking for another tax increase, but not a "major" one. He explained to his advisers that he wanted to give the Air Force its 143 groups, though it would cost more in taxes. At any rate, Truman has passed down the word to include a tax request in his message to Congress. . . Note—Though the Joint Chiefs asked for $80 billion for defense alone, this has already been rejected by the White House which is holding out for $60 billion. . . The Budget Bureau goes further, in trying to trim the military down to $45 billion.

Nearly 4 million farm tractors are now in use in the United States.

June Haver did what no insider thought she could: "Affairs of State" running after Celeste Holm left it. . . It wasn't long ago that the Oliviers "Romeo" and Juliet" was damned as heartily by the critics as their "Cleopatra" repertory was praised. . . And it was Tallulah's production of "Anthony and Cleopatra" which was sunk before it left to sail the Nile.

The Story-Tellers: "Master Spy," which McGraw-Hill publishes on the 10th, offers evidence that Nazi Gen. Rommel wasn't the anti-Nazi the Hollywood movie people portrayed him. On page 169 author Ian Colvin quotes him on the SS atrocities: "That's not my concern at all. I'm a fighting man." The book also reveals (page 108) that Rommel was in charge of Hitler's bodyguard battalion early in the war and that he had ample opportunity to kill Hitler at that time. On page 239 it is disclosed that Churchill actively encouraged the group planning to overthrow Hitler and the leader of these Nazis, Baron von Kietel, was contact man with Britain. . . A. J. Cronin's first non-fiction work is due February 25th. An autobiography named "Adventures in Two Worlds. . . Intelligentsia: Dusty Anderson, one of Broadway's most beautiful cover girls, is greatly responsible for Shelley Winters' new thriller, "Phone Call from a Stranger." Dusty read it in a magazine (while in a Hollywood beauty salon) and suggested it to her husband director Jean Negulesco. . . The obscure night watchman in Pittsburgh who composed the nation's No. 1 torch song, "Cry," is expected to get about $75,000 for it. . . The sales of Christopher Isherwood's "Berlin Stories" soared since his play, "I Am a Camera," opened. He wrote it six years ago. . . Lines that stay in the ears from the film (about a songwriter), "See You In My Dreams": "The bad ones take longer to write. . . When a character in it confessed being 'inspired by the classics' it recalled Deems Taylor's devastating crack: "Inspired by is a pleasant way of saying swiped from."
