Speaker Praises Lions Programs

In outlining the progress of the "big four" in the civic club category, Paul Lyman, guest speaker at the meeting of the Dunn Lions Club last night, praised this service organization for its outstanding achievements.

Of the principal civic clubs, Rotary, Kiwanis, Exchange and Lions, he said, the latter, although the baby of them all, since it was the last to be formed, has made such progress as to bid fair to outstrip the others.

Much of its progress, he pointed out, was due to the fact that the organization was not allowed to remain static, and was still in the process of constant growth, with new clubs constantly being formed, not only in the United States, but in foreign countries as well.

Lyman, head of the Industrial Sales Department of the Carolina Power and Light Company, is a past-president of the Raleigh Lions Club, one of the largest in the state.

Charles R. Gordon, temporary president and Willard P. Smith, temporary secretary of the Godwin Lions Club were present with five members.

Other special guests included H. M. Tyler and Mack Watson of the Carolina Power and Light Co.

A new member, Floyd Furr, Jr., was inducted and introduced.

According to the girl's story, Fowler took the group on a wild ride into various sections of the county and also visited White Lake.

CASE CONTINUED
Superior Court Judge W. C. Harris adjourned court Thursday as the week's term still left a number of cases still on the continued list.

The case against Charles Haire, charged with the murder of his son-in-law Clyde Powell was continued for the state due to the absence of a key witness in the armed services. The solicitor also asked for a continuance in the murder case of Richard Jones, accused of the slaying of Otis Johnson.

Two cases arising out of dynamiting charges during the textile strike at Erwin Mills failed to be tried. John Engler linked with James Wilbert Strickland in the case has not yet been found. The solicitor said that if Engler is not apprehended, he intends to try Strickland at the next criminal term.

The case against Cattie Bailey, charged with violation of the prohibition laws, which reached Superior Court on appeal from Recorder's Court, was continued.

Suit against William W. Beasley on charges of assault on a female were not pressed with leave. Sam

She likes to fill a peg board, and does it in a hurry—that is what she was doing when she caught Mrs. Marks snapping her picture. There wasn't a chance to get this gal when she wasn't looking. General Ike

President Truman told his news conference yesterday that Eisenhower had assured him—in writing—that he will remain on duty as European commander as long as the President thinks necessary.

Mr. Truman said he will not stand in Eisenhower's way if he wants to come home and campaign. But he added that he will not recall the general before the convention unless Eisenhower requests it.

Before his decision Wednesday to enter the Illinois contest, Taft had planned to go into only the Ohio and Wisconsin primaries.

DUFF COMMENTS

Mr. Truman's news conference remarks about Eisenhower yesterday drew no formal comment from the Eisenhower campaign organization, but Sen. James H. Duff (R-Pa.) commented:

"Whatever the President's public expression is, he undoubtedly realizes that the Republican party now has available in Gen. Eisenhower a man who can very definitely put the Democrats out of business here at Washington at the next election."

Rotary To Have A Quiz Program

The Rotary program for tonight will be a quiz program on topics of general interest, conducted by John Strickland, program chairman. The questions will be of the type usually found on radio quiz programs.

"When we listen to a quiz show at home, it seems we always know the answers," commented Strickland. "We will be able to determine, tonight, just how well this works out in actual practice."

To heighten the interest of the participants, the program chairman is offering a first and second prize, to be awarded to the persons who know the answers to the greatest number of questions.

Dunn Woman

worked for a time in Raleigh for the Seaboard Railway.

That was her second time in Raleigh. Just after finishing college, she was employed by the North Carolina Agriculture Department, working under Gov. Kerr Scott, then Commissioner of Agriculture.

With the end of the war and the return of her husband to this country, Mrs. Romney came back to Washington. While Miles studied at Georgetown University, receiving first a degree from the foreign service school and then a law degree, his wife worked at the Pentagon.

She started as secretary to the army liaison officer for the White House but later was made administrative assistant to that officer.

In that capacity, she was located in the same office with Gen. Ridgway, who then was deputy Chief of Staff for administration.

THINKS RIDGWAY "MARVELOUS"

When Ridgway's own secretary was absent from the office, Mrs. Romney pinch-hit for him, and she came to know the general.

Describing the U. N. Commander as "a marvelous person," Mrs. Romney voices high regard for his abilities and feels that if anyone can achieve success in Korea, he's the one to do it.

Incidentally, if Gen. MacArthur, whom Ridgway last year succeeded in the Far East, had decided to use the Pentagon office made available to him on his return to this country, Mrs. Romney would have been his secretary. But she didn't, so she wasn't.

But the Tar Heel woman made the acquaintance of many other famous people, including the president of the United States, during her days on the White House liaison desk. On one occasion, she accompanied a liaison officer to the White House for a medal presentation ceremony and there shook hands with President Truman.

SERVED WHITE HOUSE AIDES
Her work brought her into daily contact with White House aides, as it centered around answering correspondence and queries from the executive office.

She also found her later work with Gen. Collins "extremely interesting."

When Mrs. Romney had a job her mother, Mrs. R. L. Godwin, of Dunn, stayed here to look out for young Karin during the day, but has returned home, and Julia Romney is devoting full-time to housekeeping.

Asked if she found it dull to be at home all the time, Julia Romney's answer was an emphatic negative.

"Dull? I should say not!" she laughed. "With a two-year-old, life is far from dull."
