CRIME CLEANUP For the first time in years the crime-ridden District of Columbia is getting a good going over. Credit for cleanup goes to a lot of people: Forthright Sen. Matt Neely of West Virginia who hasn't pulled a single punch...

I can breathe again! For a while, I had my doubts. After all, a stuffed-up nose isn't funny. Wheezing and gasping for air isn't either. But thanks to Dr. Salsbury's Can-Pho-Sal, I'm feeling better and can breathe again!

Winchell (Continued From Page Two) of compensation that the boys from his own district are receiving for fighting in Korea?

Winston Churchill's address to Congress reminds you that Atlas may have held the world on his shoulders once, but Churchill did it twice. It must have been an interesting reunion that Churchill had at Ottawa—with Gen'l Alexander, now Governor General of Canada. Ten years ago, Gen'l Alexander was heroically engaged in preventing Rommel from occupying the hotel reservations his agents had actually made in Cairo.

Congress has a bill before it prohibiting the paying of ransom from relatives for people in Red China. It sounds almost inhuman, but there is sense to it. General Mao's kidnapers follow the same brand of ethics as Erwin Hauptmann. A man or a nation low enough to kidnap a human being is almost always certain to wretch after the last blood money has been paid.

General Ridgway "broke" three of his Honor Guards because they swiped a few pieces from his candy box. (The G. I.'s around his headquarters say he used to share his with the enlisted men.) Amazing that Ridgway should know how many candies were missing—but was so confused on the number of atrocities against his soldiers. He'll probably live in American history as "The Candy Kid"—the only general who kept better account of his chocolates than of his men.

Captain Carlson is as symbolical on land as he is on sea. He insisted on walking, not riding, up Broadway. Proving that a man who keeps his feet on the ground is the very same one who keeps his head in a storm.
