Some members admitted privately, however, that it is easier to promise budget cuts than to make them, especially in an election year when there is heavy pressure for federal spending on local projects. In the past, Congress has seldom if ever reduced spending as much as members predicted.

Failure Seen Unless Reds Come Across

PANMUNJON, Korea (AP)—The United Nations Command expressed hope today that the Communists will make a "substantial gesture" to break a 26-day deadlock in truce negotiations and make a realistic armistice possible.

A formal statement issued by Brig. Gen. William P. Nuckols, chief U. N. spokesman, implied that unless the Reds do make some concessions on the double deadlock over the exchange of war prisoners and terms for enforcing an armistice, the talks may end in failure.

Nuckols issued the statement after the return from Allied headquarters in Tokyo of Maj. Howard M. Turner, chief delegate for the Allies on the subcommittee on armistice terms.

STILL HOLDS HOPE

Nuckols said the Allies still have hopes that the Communists will back down from their stubborn insistence on their own program.

"We hope that the Communists finally will come to the realization that the U. N. position is a firm one and that they will make some gesture, a substantial gesture, toward meeting the U. N. halfway," Nuckols said.

"We have gone half way and we are waiting for them to come down the road and meet us. Our position is firm, but we still have hopes or obviously we would not be continuing our negotiations.

"We hope for a realistic armistice that will not give either side an advantage they do not possess." Nuckols' statement indicated that Turner had returned from a visit of nearly a week to Tokyo without orders to make further concessions which the Reds had hoped to exact.
