Freighter Crew Reported Safe

ORRACOKE, N. C. (AP)—The crew of the motorship Midget, grounded and breaking up in a howling Atlantic storm, rode a lifeboat through a pounding surf to a safe landing on tiny Portsmouth Island near here today.

The 26-member crew abandoned the stricken vessel at 2:55 a. m. on orders of skipper Ludolph Tanden, of Melford, N. J., after the Coast Guard made several futile attempts to reach the vessel which had been driven aground by a freak storm.

DARING PLUNGE "Coast Guard boats couldn't get out to them because of the rough water," a spokesman at Norfolk said in announcing that the crew had reached safety after its daring plunge through the surf in an open boat.

Tanden gave the order to abandon ship as seas boiled up by gale force winds - began breaking the back of the Midget.

He estimated the crew rode the life boat from a mile to a mile and a half before hitting the beach on tiny Portsmouth Island along North Carolina's Outer Banks, scene of many a previous shipwreck.

A Coast Guard spokesman credited Tanden with "excellent maneuvering" of the lifeboat to make the landing in "mountainous" seas.

Headquarters of the Coast Guard at Norfolk said a search plane from Elizabeth City, N. C. spotted the grounded ship before the order to abandon was given, and a crew with portable lifesaving gear landed on the leeward side of the island from a picket boat.
