

Boy Who Disappeared 26 Years Ago Found Naked With Five-Foot Beard

BRISTOL, England (AP) — The little boy who disappeared here 26 years ago has been found in the home of his spinster aunt—huddled naked in a blanket with hair five feet three inches long and a plaited beard hanging to his waist.

Neighbors called police when they heard window glass shattering in the home of Miss Louise Tucker, 84, and then screams of "murder."

Police broke into the house. They found Miss Tucker flinging bottles and money into her garden.

IN CANDLE-LIT ROOM
In a candle-lit room, naked except for his blanket, and covered from the waist up with his tangled hair, the police found Harry Tucker, whom they listed as "aged about 40." He was identified as a nephew of Miss Tucker and was taken to a mental institution.

Mrs. Doris Flay, a neighbor, said: "There used to be a little boy in the house a long time ago, but he left school at 14, and we have never seen him since."

Police said they are trying to find out how Harry's existence was concealed during the war when everybody needed an identity card to obtain food rations.

DONATES BLOOD TO SOLVE DILEMMA — While driving back to Fort Jackson, S. C., Pvt. Robert Peterson's car broke down at Indianapolis. He couldn't continue the trip by public transportation because his wife, Lorraine, has a nervous condition that prohibits such travel. Fearing that he would be considered AWOL, Peterson appealed to the Red Cross who helped him get on his way. For their trouble the GI donated a pint of blood to the Red Cross. Here are the Peterson's and their dogs before they took to the road again.
