obligation to build and maintain roads, but did not relieve them of bonded debts for roads and bridges already built. Increasing demands for better public schools were imposing tax burdens upon the people at county level, and there was wide disparity in school facilities provided in different counties. At state level North Carolina was approaching default on bond debt payments. A desperate condition called for courageous action.

LEGISLATION — The need produced the men to meet it. Governor Ehringhaus reluctantly accepted necessity for a sales tax. The late A. D. McLean, who had moved over from the house in 1931 to the senate in 1933 and headed the education committee, led the fight for public schools. Grady Rankin, then and now (though not continuously since) senator from Gaston county, was chairman of the senate finance committee and lent tremendous aid in putting through the necessary bills. But it was recognized then and now that the genius, the personality and the diligence of Rufus A. Doughton, chairman of the house finance committee was mainly responsible for the 1933 revenue act. It required days and long nights of toil, but out of one of the longest legislative sessions in state history came a revenue policy that has not been materially changed since. It was re-enacted in 1935 and 1937 and in 1939 was made "permanent" and successive amendments since have not affected its basic provisions.

OUTSIDERS — Throughout the Ehringhaus administration and that of Governor Clyde Royce which followed, this taxing bill produced enough revenue to reasonably meet the expanding needs of the state, as it was designed to do. That reasonable balance between income and outgo probably would have continued, but for the impact of unforeseeable outside influences. First of these outside interferences was the rise of Hitler and Mussolini, causing the second world war and putting a ban on civilian spending, while producing inflationary yields of state revenue. That condition prevailed throughout the administration of Governors Broughton and Cherry, and resulted in huge unexpended cash reserves by 1948.

SCOTT — That year Kerr Scott was nominated and elected governor on a platform calling for using the cash surplus to alleviate the deficit in services. Despite charges and counter-charges of non-cooperation, the General Assembly went along with his ideas, appropriated for immediate use all the accumulated reserves and authorized elections for borrowing a quarter billion dollars more. The people approved the borrowing—and some conservative citizens got concerned about too much spending. They feared the state budget would be as much out of balance on the debit side at end of the Scott regime as it was on the credit side when he began his campaign.

STALIN — That might have happened but for the impact of other outside influences. Josef Stalin began acting up to start what many people even now regard as the third world war of this generation. That brought more national government spending, more inflationary income for North Carolinians and more money into the state treasury from the long standing income and sales tax levies. The slump in state revenue that occurred soon after adjournment of the 1949 assembly did not last long. Outbreak of the "incident" in Korea occasioned a faster and greater lump than did the attack on Pearl Harbor. Governors Broughton and Cherry had justifiable pride in the surplus they left in the treasury. Also there can be discerned in the shadows, like Banquo's ghost, the figures of Hitler and Stalin, whose RESUME — Back of all this loom the stalwart figures of Rufe Doughton and Blucher Ehringhaus and their predecessors and colleagues who formulated the sound fiscal policy which had sustained North Carolina's continued advancement. final decision is made. Another merchandising project discussed was the possibility of merchants in Dunn remaining open on one night each week. The group felt that this would prove advantageous to shoppers unable to get to the stores during regular daytime hours. This, too, will be discussed among the merchants.

The idea of having a Wednesday morning special at each store during the summer months was also discussed. If approved, this would go into effect after Easter when all the stores begin closing. James Snipes, retiring chairman, presided and Chamber of Commerce Manager Norman Suttles was present in an advisory capacity. Other members present were: Marvin Raynor, Harry Phipps, Gene Johnson, R. L. Remsburg, Jerry Butler, Bert Alabaster, Frank Belmont, Joe Wilkins, Floyd Furr, Sam Baer and Charles Whittenton.

ernor Scott is fully justified in boasting of the fact that he put the idle money he found in the treasury to work, and that the newly borrowed money served its intended purpose of advancing the state. He can also boast, as did Broughton and Cherry, that his administration did not bankrupt the state or deplete its treasury.

At one point, after McCarthy had asked him an involved question, ambitions for world dominance occasioned the inflationary processes that made more tax dollars available.

hauling Soviet oil to Communist China. Morris promptly appealed to Chairman Clyde R. Hoey D-NC to give him a chance to reply to McCarthy before he was forced to answer any more direct questions by the grim-looking Wisconsin Republican.

"My patriotism is at stake," Morris said. Hoey ruled that he had a right to respond to McCarthy with a brief statement.

START SHOUTING — Morris began slugging back verbally at McCarthy and a shouting match was on. "Things got so out of hand that Sen. John L. McClellan D-Ark demanded, 'let's see if we can find some way to conduct this hearing with some decorum.'"

Sen. Karl E. Mundt R-SD said, "Mr. Chairman, things are getting pretty badly out of hand."

Hoey, gentle and judicial, restored order and the questioning went on. Before it did, McClellan told Morris that "you've brought a lot of this on yourself." McClellan accused Morris of "not giving direct answer" in his testimony yesterday and of not having the proper attitude.

The outbreak came shortly after Morris told the witness stand for the second day for questioning about surplus tanker deals in which his New York law firm represented two Chicago-backed outfits.

Hungry Burglar Stocks Up Meat

A hungry burglar broke into the meat house of John C. Raynor on Route 1 Dunn some time during the night and stole two 20 pound hams, two shoulders weighing between 20 and 25 pounds and two 15 pound slabs of side meat.

The meat had been sugar cured at the Colonial Frozen Foods Lockers and Raynor had placed it in the meat house for leisurely consumption. He reported his loss to the Dunn Police Department at 9 o'clock this morning and officers are investigating.

LUBOCK, TEX. (P) — Sen. Robert A. Taft confessed today he was a "little disappointed" by running second best in the New Hampshire primary.

"We thought we'd do better than that," Taft said in his plane while flying high over a howling West Texas dust storm. "Of course, I wasn't too confident." Taft said he had expected to win four delegates.

Morris retorted, "LIKE A DOG"

"Why don't you ask questions like a gentleman?" He appealed to Hoey. "He's going after me like a dog."

"I don't think that's quite so," McClellan tried to cut in. Morris said that normally "you would go to the State Department" for policy guidance in such things.

"I wouldn't go to the State Department," McCarthy snapped. "No, you wouldn't go to any department—you'd just sound off," Morris retorted.

When Morris accused McCarthy of having "knocked off a lot of characters," McCarthy replied: "I haven't knocked off any that didn't need to be knocked off."

"Oh yes, you have," Morris shouted. McCarthy said he wanted to find out if Morris was the "active" president of China International Foundation, which indirectly controlled the ships or only a "dummy."

DENIES BEING DUMMY — "I've never been a dummy in my life," Morris snapped. But he admitted that the foundation ultimately got profits from the Soviet business.

This led to the shouting match. Republican members had been critical of Morris from the outset. Before the hearing, they told reporters he would have to cut out his "horseplay" and "shtetnigans" and take the hearing more seriously.

"You don't think you're as good a man this morning as you thought you were yesterday," Mundt taunted at one point early in the hearing.

ORTON PLANTATION will be selling choice azaleas and camellia plants at the corner of South Wilson Ave. & East Cumberland St. Friday March 14 from 9 a.m. to 5:30 p.m. Sponsored by the Hort and Grow Garden Club of Dunn. If there is bad weather, the sale will be postponed.
