 contesting the law, recently decided the statute was not clear concerning drawing of jurors and began fusing jury trials.
AGREES LAW NOT CLEAR
 Solicitor Hooks agreed with the judge that the law is not clear on that point.
 He said today, however, that Judge Strickland would have to find a new way or a new case to get the matter decided by the Supreme Court.
 Solicitor Hooks' decision confirmed an opinion expressed by Attorneys Everette L. Dofferymyre and Duncan C. Wilson sometime ago.
 Solicitor Hooks agreed that it was most extraordinary for the judge of a lower court to refuse to abide by the ruling of a higher court.
 The district solicitor emphasized that he didn't want to become involved in the squabble now going on in the Dunn court.
WOULD TAKE LONG TIME
 Solicitor Hooks said that if Judge Strickland decides to try to get another case to the Supreme Court, it would probably take at least six months or longer to do so.
 Both attorneys and defendants already are complaining about the delay in trials. Continued refusal to allow jury trials will also mean, point out lawyers, that the court docket will become so crowded and so congested that it can never be untangled.

This will mean, they said, that witnesses will be gone and that some of the cases would have to be non-prossed or thrown out of court. This has already happened in the case of Mary Vice.
 Mary Vice was halled into court on a liquor charge and requested a jury trial. Judge Strickland refused a jury, heard the case himself and convicted the woman and gave her a sentence.

 Attorney Everette Dofferymyre took the case to Superior Court and Judge W. H. S. Burgwyn ruled that Judge Strickland had erred and sent the case back to Judge Strickland to be tried by jury.
CASE DROPPED
 Despite the fact that Judge Strickland had found sufficient evidence to convict her without a jury trial, the case was non-prossed by the State, and the woman went free. Solicitor Sirep Bryan said witnesses were unavailable.
 Attorney Dofferymyre claims it was unfair for the State to convict her in a trial without jury and then to refuse to give her an opportunity to exonerate herself in a trial by jury.
 Whether or not Judge Strickland and Solicitor Bryan will be able to get another case to the Supreme Court is not known.

CASES PILING UP
 Lawyers of the county contend they should wait until the Legislature convenes and then have the law clarified, if it needs clarifying, instead of delaying trials and congesting the docket.
 Several times in former years, talk has arisen concerning abolishment of the Dunn Recorder's Court and establishment of a general county court. Some are afraid this effort may be revived in view of the situation now existing here.
 As of today, the issue was right back where it started sometime ago—with little or no hope of reaching the Supreme Court this year. In the meantime, the cases are piling up.

 die of October, it was pointed out and the definite decision on the route will be made at that time.

SECRET MEETINGS
 Dr. Earp was accused of going underground in his effort to get the highway built along the lines that he favors, and with holding secret meetings without consulting boards of Commissioners along the route who would be affected by the change.
 Washburn pointed out that the rerouting of the road would not only hurt the businesses along 301, but would hurt the towns as well, since the town income depended to a large extent on taxes levied on business. This would have to be made up by the average taxpayer.

"It might be a good idea to keep the public fully informed of the implications of the change," he declared. "With the backing of city and county officials, the cumulative effect on the Highway Commission would be something they could not afford to ignore."
 He suggested that a committee should be appointed to call on gubernatorial candidate William B. Umstead. "He is aware of the value of the tourist business to the state and I am sure he would consider this," he declared.
WASHINGTON APPEAL
 The appropriation for the new regional-military has not yet been made by the federal government, it was pointed out by Earl McD. Westbrook and there is still time to make an appeal through the North Carolina Senator and Representatives.
 Speaker after speaker reiterated the fact that the relocation would be an economic and property loss to towns now on the route and offered suggestions for action to prevent the loss.
 Johnston County representatives related that those on the side of the railroad where the highway now runs had driven their congressmen protesting the move, and that those where the new road would be located had been equally vehement in protesting the right-of-way being run through their land.
 Clarence E. McLamb, President of the Dunn Chamber of Commerce, welcomed the group and told them, "All I can say about 301 is that we'd like it to stay where it is. We cannot understand why the state should propose such a new road for just a few individuals to enjoy as

 as corruption hunter after being "warned" that Morris was involved in surplus tanker deals which the Justice Department was investigating. It said the charge "seems well justified" that McGrath thought Morris "might be susceptible to pressure."
 McGrath bristled with indignation at the suggestion that he deliberately tried to prevent an effective clean-up campaign.
 "Their report is beneath the dignity of men who care to be honest and honorable," he told a reporter.
 The former attorney general declined, however, to go into detail about his side of the story "at this time."

MORRIS COMMENTS
 In New York, Morris said he believed that McGrath fired him because "he didn't like my methods" of ferreting out corruption, particularly the financial questionnaires he tried to get McGrath and other high Justice Department officials to fill out.
 The report, which described the whole anti-corruption drive as an "awkward, bungling" affair, was approved by a subcommittee composed of four Democrats and three Republicans. Its chairman is Rep. Frank L. Chelf (D-Ky.).
 Stephen A. Mitchell, now chairman of the Democratic National Committee, was the subcommittee's chief counsel during its investigation of the Morris-McGrath episode.

The subcommittee said the evidence indicates that McGrath was "determined" to have some control over Morris' investigation. It also criticized McGrath for refusing to give Morris certain information he requested, including data on personal finances of McGrath and all Justice Department employees. The subcommittee said this "cast serious doubts on his good faith" in promising Morris full cooperation.

Truman

 it's insulting to the American people to tell them they make up their minds according to their emotions, and not on the basis of the great issues that are before them."
DEFENDS CORRUPTION
 Mr. Truman also defended his administration on the corruption issue.
 He said that he had "cleaned up corruption in government wherever I've found it." But the Republicans, he charged, don't really want to get rid of corruption, preferring to kick it around as a football.
 Mr. Truman said that "an unholy crew" of Republicans representing special interest lobbies had decided to try to make corruption the big issue in the presidential campaign.
 Most of the 2,500,000 men and women who work for the government are "some of the finest and most honorable people in the country," Mr. Truman said.

TALKS ABOUT WAR
 Mr. Truman said the voters had better "look out, neighbor" if they wanted to avoid a third world war. "The Republican candidate seems to be listening to some strange advice so far as a foreign policy is concerned," he said.
 The President claimed his administration had "crushed" the Communist conspiracy in this country and stopped the advance of communism all over the globe. "We moved into Korea to make it plain to the Kremlin that the free countries of the world don't plan to engage in appeasement—for we have learned from bitter experience that appeasement is the road to total war," Mr. Truman said.

MANY STOPS
 In addition to the Farzo address, the President scheduled whistle-stop appeals for votes in Breckenridge, Minn., and nine places in North Dakota—Grand Forks, Larimore, Lakota, Devils Lake, Minot, Berthold, Stanley, Tioga and Williston.

Bible Program

Music for the program by the choir of the Divine Street Methodist Church under the direction of Mrs. Thad Pope, will include an anthem, "The Holy Scripture" specially arranged for the program by Mrs. Pope.
